Leamington appears in Domesday Book as Lamintone, but was subsequently designated Leamington Priors, through its being granted to the priors of Kenilworth. Since 1811, when the town contained only 543 inhabitants, Leamington has risen with marvellous rapidity, its progress being due to its sheltered position in the valley of the Leam and the historical interest and beauty of its neighbourhood, but chiefly, perhaps, to the excellence of its medicinal springs and baths. The town was incorporated as Royal Leamington Spa in 1875, and was included in the parl. limits of Warwick and Leamington in 1885; its boundaries were again enlarged in 1890.

Yorkshire, on river Aire, 25 miles SW. of York, 43 NE. of Manchester, and 185 NW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 21,596 ac., pop. 428,968; co. bor., 21,596 ac., pop. 428,968; par., 2737 ac., pop. 177,920. The parliamentary constituency contains 70,870 electors. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Lord Clarendon in his "History of the Rebellion" (written in 1642), refers to Leeds as being one of three "very populous and rich towns, depending wholly upon clothiers." From this it will appear that the town has for centuries been known for its mfr. of woollen goods, an industry of which it is now the chief centre. Little is known regarding the early history of the town, which is supposed to have Norman, Saxon, and even Roman associations. It was incorporated by Charles I. in 1626. About a fifth of the population was carried off by the plague in 1644. Besides the woollen mfrs., with their immense variety of fabrics, Leeds carries on nearly all the employments common to a large industrial town. Here are large flax-mills, canvas and rope works, mfrs. of linen, thread, and worsted, also of boots and shoes (an important industry), glass and earthenware. The working of iron has been largely developed; engine works are numerous, also railway plant works, steam saw mills, breweries, tanneries, &c. St. Peter's church is an interesting and beautiful building, containing a monument by Flaxman. The splendid Town Hall, built 1853–58, at a cost of £140,000, is 250 ft. long by 200 in breadth, and is about 67 ft. high, and provides accommodation for about 8000 people; its tower rises to the height of 225 ft. There are numerous other public buildings including Municipal Offices, Exchange, Post Office, infirmary, hospitals, &c. Yorkshire College now ranks as a university, and was affiliated to the Victoria University in 1887; it includes scientific, technical and medical departments. The central free library has 22 branches and 23 juvenile libraries attached to it. Of the five public parks, Woodhouse Moor and Roundhay Park are the principal. Five bridges span the river Aire (which here becomes navigable); while by the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, and other waterways, traffic is maintained with both Eastern and Western seaports. Leeds returns 5 members to Parliament (5 divisions—viz., North, Central, East, West, and South, 1 member for each division). It is the first city in Yorkshire and the fifth in England; it was made a city in 1893 and a county borough in 1899.—2. Leeds, par. and vil., Kent, 5 miles SE. of Maidstone; 1653 ac., pop. 650; P.O., T.O.; a little to N. is Leeds Castle (13th cent.), one of the finest seats in Kent.

Leicester, parl. and co. bor., par., market town, and co. town of Leicestershire, with ry. stas., M. R. (London Road, West Bridge), G. C. R. (Central), G. N. R. (Belgrave Road), on river Soar, 29 miles NW. of Northampton and 99 miles NW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 3121 ac., pop. 151,489; co. bor. and par., 8586 ac., pop. 211,579; the parl. constituency contains 25,491 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. As a Roman station it was known as Ratæ Coritanorum. The first charter of incorporation was granted by King John. Leicester is the chief centre of the great agricultural and wool-producing district; has mfrs. of boots, shoes, hosiery, elastic web, lace, tanning, tobacco, spinning, &c.; there are breweries and distilleries. The town has water communication by the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal and the river Soar. The Corporation maintains a technical and art school, public libraries, baths, a museum and art gallery, and has constructed, at a cost of over £1,000,000, a most complete system of sewerage, sewage disposal, and flood prevention works. There are four public parks and numerous recreation grounds. At the Blue Boar Inn (now demolished) Richard III. slept on the night before the battle of Bosworth Field (1485); and at Leicester Abbey (now in ruins) Cardinal Wolsey died in 1530. Leicester has sent 2 members to Parliament since the reign of Edward I.

Leicestershire, inland co. of England, bounded N. by Notts, E. by Lincolnshire and Rutland, SE. by Northamptonshire, SW. by Warwickshire, and NW. by Derbyshire; greatest length, about 44 miles; greatest breadth, about 40 miles; area, 532,788 ac., pop. 437,490. The parliamentary constituency contains 56,393 electors. The county is served by the M. R., G. C. R., G. N. R., and L. & NW. R. Low undulating hills cover the surface of the county, the highest elevation being Bardon Hill (912 ft.), in the Charnwood range. Charnwood Forest, in the NW., is now nearly destitute of trees. The principal rivers are tributaries of the Trent, which flows in the NW. of the county; these are the Soar, Wreake, Anker, Devon, and Mease. The Avon and Welland flow in the S. Two canals, the Union and the Grand Union, are connected with the Grand Junction Canal. Much of the soil is loamy, and the richest districts are kept in pasture, upon which are reared the largest of sheep and cattle for which the county is famous; from the sheep is procured the finest of long-staple wools, and this is used in the hosiery manufacture. Dairy farms are numerous, especially in the vicinity of Melton Mowbray, where the well known Stilton cheese is largely produced. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Leicestershire consists mostly of the new red sandstone formation. The coal measures have a total area of about 15 square miles, the most productive mines being in the neighbourhood of Ashby de la Zouch; iron ore is found at Melton Mowbray. Hosiery is the leading mfr., the wool employed being that of Leicestershire sheep. The county has 327 pars., the parliamentary and co. bor. of Leicester (2 members), and the mun. bor. of Loughborough. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Peterborough. For Parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 4 divisions—Eastern, or Melton; Mid, or Loughborough; Western, or Bosworth; and Southern, or Harborough—1 member for each division.

Market day, Wednesday. Leith is divided by the Water of Leith into two parts, called North Leith and South Leith. It is connected with Edinburgh (G. P. O. 1½ m. N.) by Leith Walk and other lines of streets, and by railway and tramway. Leith is first mentioned, in a charter of 1128, as Inverleith. It early rose to commercial importance, but suffered repeatedly by war. Leith is the chief seaport on the E. coast of Scotland, and has a splendid roadstead and extensive docks, comprising the Imperial, Albert, Edinburgh, Victoria, and Old Docks. On the E. pier is a fixed light seen 8 miles, and at the extremity of the W. pier is a fixed light seen 10 miles. It carries on a large foreign, colonial, and coasting trade, and has regular steam communication with London, Hull, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Orkney, and Shetland, and Continental and Baltic ports. In 1880 a line of cargo-carrying steamers began to run to New York. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The industrial establishments include shipbuilding-yards, saw mills, flour mills, rope-works, engineering works, breweries, distilleries, chemical works, &c. Leith is the head of the 27 fishery districts of Scotland. On the SE. side of the town are Leith Links, public recreation ground. Leith Fort (1779) is the headquarters of the Royal Artillery in Scotland. The corporation maintains slaughter-houses, baths, public parks, and a municipal lodging-house. Public buildings include the Town Hall, Hospital, Customs House, Nautical College, Sailors' Home, &c. The acres include the lochs and the neighbouring islands parochially connected with the larger island. Lewis proper is divided into the 4 pars. of Stornoway, Barvas, Uig, and Lochs, all of Ross and Cromarty; Harris forms a par. of Inverness-shire. Lewis proper is separated from Harris by an isthmus, 8 miles broad, between Loch Seaforth and Loch Resort. It is triangular in shape, and is 28 miles broad by 42 miles long. The chief heights are Mealasbhal and Ben Mhor, both with an alt. of about 1750 ft. The greater part of the surface consists of moss, moor, and loch, and but a very small acreage is under cultivation, notwithstanding the extensive improvements effected by Sir James Matheson, who purchased the island in 1844 for £190,000. (Harris is more mountainous, and a large part of the surface consists of sheep walks and deer forests.) There is almost no wood. The coasts abound with white fish and herring, and the streams with salmon and trout. Gaelic is generally spoken; there are numerous antiquities and Druidical remains; see CALLERNISH. The chief place is Stornoway. There are lighthouses at Arnish Point, Stornoway, and at the Butt of Lewis, the northern extremity of the island and of the Hebrides.

Market day, Friday. A great share of the interest attaching to the history of this ancient city, which traditionally derives its name from the martyrdom of 1000 Christians in the reign of Diocletian, is connected with its cathedral, which, according to Fuller, was completed during Bishop Heyworth's episcopate (1420–1447). The building is described as being excellently proportioned, but as a whole more attractive from its picturesque appearance than from its architectural beauty; it has three spires, the height of the middle one being 252 ft. A charter of incorporation was granted to the city by Edward VI. Samuel Johnson (1709–1784), the great lexicographer and moralist, was born here, and was educated at the grammar school, which also has the honour of having upon its roll the names of Addison, Ashmole, and Garrick. The purity of the water makes brewing a successful industry. Carriage and harness work are largely carried on. There are extensive market gardens in the vicinity. There is a free library and museum; the public recreation ground covers 5½ acres.

co. Kerry; greatest length, E. and W., 53 miles; greatest breadth, N. and S., 32 miles; average breadth, 22 miles; circuit about 175 miles, of which 35 are washed by the Shannon; area, 680,842 ac., or 3.2 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 146,098, of whom 138,691, or 94.9 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 5796, or 4.0, Episcopalians; 431, or 0.3, Presbyterians; and 726, or 0.5, Methodists. The parliamentary constituency contains 16,230 electors. The co. is served by the G. S. & W. R. A portion of the co. on the E. belongs to the Golden Vale. There are mountains along the S. border. The principal streams are the Maigue, Deal, Mulkerne, Commogue, and Morning Star, all flowing into the Shannon. The surface generally consists of a finely undulating plain, well watered, and highly productive. Much of the soil is a rich loam. Live stock and agricultural produce are largely exported, dairy and stock farms being numerous. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Limestone prevails; clay, slate, and red sandstone occur in various parts of the co. There are mfrs. of woollens, paper, flour, and meal. Limerick gives the title of earl and viscount to the family of Pery. The co. comprises 115 pars. and parts of 22 others; the parl. and co. bor. of Limerick (1 member) and the towns of Newcastle and Rathkeale. The parliamentary constituency contains 5359 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. The city stands upon low ground, and is composed of 3 parts—the Irish Town, the English Town (situated on King's Island in the river), and the fine suburb of Newtown Pery. The river is crossed by 5 bridges. The public structures, for the most part, are large and handsome, and include St. Mary's Cathedral (1179), Town Hall, Exchange, Court House, Hospital, &c. There are barracks for cavalry, infantry, and artillery. The trade and commerce of Limerick are extensive. In addition to the quay walls of the city, there is a magnificent floating dock, where vessels of 1000 tons can discharge. The harbour has an area of 7½ ac. and about 3000 feet of quayage; there is also a large graving dock. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Bacon-curing is a very extensive industry, and a considerable export trade is carried on in bacon, butter, eggs, &c. The lace mfr. is less important than formerly, but is still carried on at the Convent of the Good Shepherd; the work is entirely done by hand and commands high prices. There is a clothing factory which gives employment to upwards of 1000 hands. Other industries are the mfr. of flour, condensed milk, salt, agricultural implements, and manures. Limerick is an ancient city; it was plundered by the Danes in 812; was the seat of the kings of Thomond; was taken by the English in 1174; was unsuccessfully besieged by William III. in 1690, but capitulated to General Ginkell in 1691; and the dismantling of its fortifications commenced in 1760. Lincoln, parl. and co. bor., city, co. town, and co. in itself, with ry. stas., G. N. R., M. R., also L. D. & E. C. R. to former sta., and G. C. R. to latter, Lincolnshire, on W. bank of river Witham, which becomes navigable here, 33 m. NE. of Nottingham and 130 m. NW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 5282 ac., pop. 51,751; co. bor., 3755 ac., pop. 48,784; the parliamentary constituency contains 9462 electors. Market day, Friday. Lincoln was the Lindum Colonia of the Romans. Camden refers to it as likely to have been a place of importance even in the time of the Britons. The see, which was originally founded at Dorchester in 636, was finally established at Lincoln in 1088, about which time the first cathedral was erected. The present splendid edifice dates from the 12th century. It is the earliest example (and one of the finest) of the Early English style, and has an imposing situation on the summit of a hill, on the slopes of which the city is built. In the central tower is the famous bell known as "Great Tom of Lincoln," which weighs 5 tons 8 cwt., and at the mouth is 6 ft. 10½ in. in diameter. The ancient castle was taken by Stephen (1140), by the Barons (1216), and by the parliamentary forces (1644); within the walls, which cover an area of 6½ ac., are the Assize Courts. Lincoln received a charter of incorporation from Richard II. Large industries are shown in mfrs. of farm implements, portable steam-engines, &c. Iron-works and steam flour-mills are in operation, while brewing and a trade in corn and wool are actively conducted. The great annual horse and cattle fair in April lasts for a week; there are also important weekly stock markets. The chief buildings include the ancient guild-hall or Stonebow (a 15th cent. gate-house), county hospital, school of science and art, &c. Besides its convenience for railway traffic, the city has excellent waterways to the coast, being connected by the Foss Dyke and the Trent with Nottingham, and by the Witham navigation with Boston and other places. There is a racecourse on which the opening and closing meetings of the flat-racing season are held. Lincoln returns 1 member to Parliament.

Lincolnshire, maritime county, in E. of England, bounded N. by Yorkshire, from which it is separated by the Humber; E. by the North Sea; S. by Northamptonshire, Cambridgeshire, and Norfolk; and W. by Notts, Leicestershire, and Rutland; greatest length, N. to S., 75 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., 45 miles; area, admin. co., 1,696,332 ac., pop. 500,022; the parliamentary constituency contains 76,205 electors. Lincolnshire is the second largest co. in England. The co. is served by G. N. R., G. C. R., M. R., L. D. & E. C. R., G. E. R., M. & G. N. Jt. R. Generally speaking the land is flat and low, especially on the coast, which in some parts requires an embankment to check the encroachments of the sea. There is much fen land, which, although drained, is but scantily populated. The Wolds, or Chalk Hills, in the NE., are about 47 miles long and 6 miles broad. Most of the co. is watered by the rivers Trent, Witham, Ancholme, and Welland, with their tributaries. The co. is intersected by an intricate network of canals and dykes, the latter being cut for the purposes of drainage. The soil is varied and exceptionally fertile, being especially rich in pasture; thus splendid breeds of oxen, horses, and sheep are reared, for all of which the county is famous. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The coast fisheries, especially at Grimsby, are of immense value. Inland the inhabitants are mostly employed in agriculture. Iron ore is also largely worked. Shipbuilding, cordage, and net mfr., and machine-making are carried on to some extent. Lincolnshire is divided into 3 divisions, viz., the Parts of Holland, the Parts of Kesteven, and the Parts of Lindsey, and comprises 761 pars., the parl. and co. bors. of Lincoln and Great Grimsby (1 member each), the parl. and mun. bors. of Boston, Grantham, and the mun. bors. of Louth and Stamford. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Lincoln. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 6 divisions—viz., West Lindsey or Gainsborough, North Lindsey or Brigg, East Lindsey or Louth, South Lindsey or Horncastle, North Kesteven or Sleaford, South Kesteven or Stamford, and Holland or Spalding, each division returning 1 member; the representation of Lincolnshire was increased from 6 to 7 members in 1885.

NW. of London by rail—par., 1858 ac., pop. 147,405; co. bor., 13,239 ac., pop. 684,958; parl. bor., 8133 ac., pop. 626,634; the parliamentary constituency contains 84,581 electors. Markets, daily. Lyrpoole and Litherpoole were ancient names of this celebrated seaport, the meaning of which is uncertain. It is very doubtful whether the town existed at the time of the Conquest. Camden (1551–1623) refers to it as being more famous for its beauty and populousness than for its antiquity. In 1172 the military operations in Ireland gave it great importance as a convenient point of embarkation for troops. The first charter was granted in 1173 by Henry II.; in 1207 the charter was confirmed by King John, and 20 years later the town was constituted a free borough by Henry III. During the reign of Elizabeth a quay and breakwater were erected, the latter to shelter ships in winter. In 1561 the merchants of the port had only 12 ships. The ship-money levied by Charles I. amounted to £25. At the time of the Civil War Liverpool was held by the Parliamentarians, and in 1644 was besieged and taken by Prince Rupert; but in a brief time it again fell into the hands of the Parliament. It is modern enterprise, however, that has created the distinction of the city. From the latter part of the 18th century its progress in mercantile and maritime affairs is without a parallel, and has raised it to the first rank of British seaports. Several lines of splendid steamships keep up regular communication with New York; others with Boston, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Halifax, the Canadian ports, and the East and West Indies. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Extending along both shores of the Mersey are immense lines of docks with enormous warehouses; all the machinery in use is of the latest and most efficient type. On the Liverpool shore 60 docks and basins extend along the river for nearly 7 miles, and on the Cheshire shore, at Birkenhead, are 12 docks with a length of 2 miles; the water area of the docks on the Liverpool side being 409½ ac., with nearly 27 miles of quay space; on the Cheshire side the water area is 165 ac., with 9½ miles of quay space; total water area 574½ ac., quay space 36½ miles. The docks can receive the largest vessels, but owing to the great difference of the tides can be opened only for a short time at high water. Among the larger of the docks may be mentioned the Hornby (17 ac.), Alexandra Dock (over 44 ac. with its branches), Canada (38½ ac.), Huskisson, Langton (over 21 ac. with branches), Brocklebank, Sandon, Wellington, &c. There are also 16 graving docks, and in connection with the docks generally there is a double line of railway over 5 miles in length N. to S. In 1893 the electric overhead railway which traverses the docks and suburbs was opened. The famous landing stage of Liverpool is an immense structure, 2478 ft. long and 80 ft. broad, supported by floating pontoons, which rise and fall with the tide; several footbridges give access to it, and a floating bridge for vehicles 550 feet long. Vessels may proceed up the Mersey as far as the mouth of the Irwell, 35 miles above Liverpool; 5 great lines of railway now enter the city, and by the completion of the Mersey Tunnel, a formidable undertaking, begun in 1872, travelling facilities have been very materially increased. Inland water communication is kept up with Yorkshire and all parts of Lancashire, chiefly by the Leeds and Liverpool Canal. The city is justly celebrated for its fine buildings. The Town Hall (1754) is the oldest and the most interesting; but the finest building, from an architectural point of view, is St. George's Hall (1854), a superb edifice, which cost £250,000, has a magnificent organ, and accommodation for 2500 people. The Exchanges and the Free Library and Museum are likewise worthy of notice. Other public edifices include the Technical College, Walker Art Gallery, New Post Office, Sailors' Home, Royal Infirmary, Municipal Buildings, and Philharmonic Hall. Liverpool Cathedral, at present under construction, will be the largest ecclesiastical building in Great Britain; estimated cost, £240,000. Of the public parks the largest is Sefton Park (269 ac. with palm house and lake) the others being Princess Park, Wavertree Park, Newsham Park, Sheil Park, and Stanley Park. At the head of the educational institutions stands L. University (formerly Univ. College of Victoria University), opened by Lord Derby in 1882, received its charter Oct. 1903, and now ranks along with the older Universities; L. College and the Government School of Art and Nautical College are also educational institutions; among middle-class schools are the Royal Institution School, Collegiate Institution, and Liverpool Institute High School. Cotton is the staple of the imports of Liverpool, which otherwise include grain, tobacco, leather, and goods from all parts of the world. The principal exports are cotton and linen mfrs., woollens, and iron and steel mfrs. An enormous trade has arisen through the importation of provisions and live stock from America and the colonies. The port, too, is the principal place in the kingdom for the departure of emigrants. Shipbuilding has fallen off greatly owing to the competition at the Clyde and in the north of England. The mfrs. of engines for marine navigation, however, have a world-wide renown. Sugar refining, iron and brass founding, ropemaking, brewing, chemical works, iron chain cable and anchor making form other leading industries. A large source of trade exists in the produce of neighbouring collieries. Water is conveyed from Lake Vyrnwy in Montgomeryshire by means of an aqueduct 77 miles long. To form the reservoir a dam was constructed across V. Valley, a village school, church, several farmhouses, and a highway being submerged; the top water area is 1121 ac. and the holding capacity 12,131,000 gallons. Bootle, Chorley, and neighbouring districts derive their water supply from the Liverpool source. Liverpool was created a diocese in 1880, at which time it was transformed into a city by royal charter. Liverpool returns 9 members to Parliament (9 divisions—viz., Kirkdale, Walton, Everton, West Derby, Scotland, Exchange, Abercromby, East Toxteth, and West Toxteth, 1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 3 to 9 members in 1885, when its parliamentary limits were extended so as to include the remainder of Toxteth Park par., additional parts of Walton on the Hill and West Derby pars., and part of Wavertree. Roscoe, historian (1753–1831), Mrs. Felicia Hemans, poetess (1793–1835), and the late Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, statesman (1809–1893), were natives. See also BIRKENHEAD and BOOTLE.

Central Criminal Court District	6,101,664

(The figures for the City Police District represent the night population.)

The centre of the Government and commerce of the British Empire, London is the greatest city of any age or country. Politically, financially, and commercially, as well as on account of its immense size and population, its progress and pre-eminence form a very remarkable feature in the history of civilisation. Capital of the Trinobantes, with the Celtic name of Llyn-Din ("fort on the pool"), it appears as early as A.D. 61 as the Londinium of the Romans, and was then a place of importance, Colonia Augusta being another of its Roman designations. Three important events have especial prominence in the pre-Norman history of London; namely, the foundation of the bishopric, supposed to have taken place in A.D. 179; the rebuilding and fortifying of the town by the Romans in 306; and the founding of St. Paul's by Ethelbert early in the 7th century. In 1079 the White Tower was built by William I., who, in the same year, granted the city its first charter, a document which is still extant. A charter granted by King John in 1189 authorised the annual election of a mayor and corporation. Conspicuous landmarks in the subsequent course of the city's history are—Wat Tyler's Rebellion, 1381; Jack Cade's Rebellion, 1450; the foundation of Christ's Hospital, 1533; numerous pestilences, culminating in the Great Plague of 1665; the Great Fire of 1666; and the Gordon Riots, 1780. The fire, although in itself a disaster of terrible magnitude, had one good effect, in so far that it swept away the old haunts of disease, and left room for the erection of the present city, the history of which, in a large measure, is the history of the progress of the British nation. Modern London has no clearly defined limits, and the determination of its unofficial boundaries is yearly becoming more difficult through its rapid and wide suburban extension. Roughly speaking, the whole metropolis may be estimated to cover about 700 sq. m. The metropolis is singularly fortunate in the possession of public parks, which for extent and beauty are unsurpassed by any open spaces belonging to other large cities. The chief are:—In the W., St. James' Park, the Green Park, Hyde Park, and Kensington Gardens; in the N., the Regent's Park, containing the gardens of the Zoological Society and the Botanical Society; in the SW., Battersea Park; and in the E., Victoria Park. In the suburbs, at no great distance, are other parks and several extensive commons. As the seat of the government of the Empire, the commercial emporium of Britain, the home of British literature, art, and science, and the place of residence, at special seasons, of the wealthier classes from all parts of the country, it is natural that London should abound with interesting, stately, and imposing buildings of all descriptions. The Imperial Parliament sits in the Houses of Parliament (foundation stone laid in 1840); in St. James' Palaces Court functions are held, and the Government departments (civil, military, and naval) are accommodated in buildings in Whitehall and in Somerset House. The City, about 1 sq. mile in area, contains the Guildhall and Mansion House, property of the Corporation, the Bank of England, which (with the Clearing House) is the centre of the banking system of the country, the Royal Exchange, the Mint, the General Post Office, and the British Museum. Connected with the last is the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, and art is represented by the National Gallery and the Victoria and Albert Museum. St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey are the finest and most important churches, the latter especially being of interest from its antiquity, and as the burial-place of the most distinguished men of the nation. London is also the supreme seat of judicature. The principal courts are congregated in the new Law Courts (opened in 1882) in the Strand. Members of the legal profession are admitted by the Inns of Court and the Law Society. To London converge the most important railways, including the L. & NW., G. W., G. C., G. N., G. E., Mid., SE. & C., L. B. & S. C., and L. & SW., where are most of the head offices of the companies and the Railway Clearing House. Education is represented by many well-known institutions. London University confers degrees, honours, and prizes on both sexes (except in the faculty of medicine). Of the colleges, University College and King's College are the principal. Medical education, at the head of which stand the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Surgeons, is actively carried on in the hospitals. The Royal College of Music, the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal Academy of Arts, and other institutions provide for education in art. The chief public schools are Westminster, St. Paul's, City of London Schools, and University College Schools. Half a million children are educated in the primary schools. The water-supply of the town is drawn, and after filtration distributed, from the Thames, Lee, and New River, and is controlled by a Water Board. The gas-supply is in the hands of joint-stock companies. Markets exist for almost every commodity that has a sufficient mercantile importance. A distinguished feature in metropolitan enterprise is the number and variety of means adopted for the conveyance of passengers and goods. The Metropolitan and the Metropolitan District Railways, the Central London and other tube electric railways carry many millions of passengers in the year, and there is an immense number of omnibuses, tramway cars, and cabs. A large goods traffic is carried on upon the Regent, Grand Junction, and other canals. Many bridges cross the Thames, the most noteworthy as an engineering work being the Tower Bridge. The trade of London comprises every department of active commercial enterprise that is usually associated with a great city. Its industries are numerous and varied, none being of exceptional importance, unless it be the preparation of furs. In its foreign commerce London shows an excess of imports over exports; it is a distributing centre for all descriptions of produce from every quarter of the globe. To meet the exigencies of this multifarious traffic, a vast amount of dock accommodation has been provided. The docks extend for several miles along the river, from the Tower to Woolwich. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The City is governed by a Lord Mayor, 25 Aldermen, and 206 Common Councilmen, and some share in its management is vested in the Livery Companies. The title of Lord Mayor was first conferred by Edward III. in 1354; Aldermen were first appointed as early as 1242. London returns 60 members to Parliament:—London City (33,049 electors), 2; Battersea and Clapham, 2; Bethnal Green, 2; Camberwell, 3; Chelsea, 1; Deptford, 1; Finsbury, 3; Fulham, 1; Greenwich, 1; Hackney, 3; Hammersmith, 1; Hampstead, 1; Islington, 4; Kensington, 2; Lambeth, 4; Lewisham, 1; Marylebone, 2; Newington, 2; Paddington, 2; St. Pancras, 4; Shoreditch, 2; Southwark, 3; Tower Hamlets, 7; Wandsworth, 1; Westminster, 3; Woolwich, 1. London University returns 1 member (4486 electors).—2. London, County of, the county of London, of recent formation, is a true geographical and legal county, or "shire," with Lord-Lieutenant, High Sheriff, and County Council. The co. was created by the Local Government Act of 1888, and was formed from parts of the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, and the ancient City of London, not hitherto within any co. but included in the co. of London for non-administrative purposes. The administrative co. contains an area of 74,839 ac., and has a population of 4,536,541. The entire co., including the City, is under the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court; there is one Court of Quarter Sessions. The London County Council has many special municipal powers, being the main drainage and fire authority for the whole co. Also, by the Local Government Act of 1899, the county, exclusive of the City of London, has been divided into the following 28 metropolitan boroughs: — Battersea, Bermondsey, Bethnal Green, Camberwell, Chelsea, Deptford, Finsbury, Fulham, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith, Hampstead, Holborn, Islington, Kensington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Paddington, Poplar, St. Marylebone, St. Pancras, Shoreditch, Southwark, Stepney, Stoke Newington, Wandsworth, City of Westminster, and Woolwich. These boroughs have each a council presided over by a mayor. Excluding the University of London, there are, within the county, 26 electoral divisions, containing 58 constituencies, one of which, the City of London, returns 2 members, and each of the others, 1 member; there are 191 civil parishes. The county is almost entirely within the dioceses of London and Rochester; Lambeth Palace, with 37 persons, is in the diocese of Canterbury.

Londonderry, vil., 3 miles E. of Bedale, North Riding Yorkshire; P.O., T.O.

Londonderry.—a maritime co., Ulster province; bounded N. by Lough Foyle and the Atlantic Ocean, E. by co. Antrim and Lough Neagh, S. by co. Tyrone, and W. by co. Donegal; greatest length, N. and S., 40 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 35 miles; average breadth, 20 miles; area, 522,315 ac., or 2.5 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 114,404, of whom 65,296, or 45.2 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 27,804, or 19.3, Protestant Episcopalians; 45,682, or 31.6, Presbyterians; and 1466, or 1.0, Methodists. The co. electorate numbers 18,349. The surface is low along the N. and E. for a width of about 6 miles, hilly in the middle, and mountainous in the S., where the highest summit, Sawel, rises to an alt. of 2240 ft. Londonderry is traversed by the Donegal Ry. and the Londonderry and Lough Swilly and Letterkenny Ry. The rivers are—Foyle, Faughan, Glen, Roe, Claudy, Moyola, and Bann, the last tracing nearly the whole of the E. boundary. The soil is for the most part fertile; the sub-strata consist of mica-schist, basalt, limestone, and sandstone. The chief crops are flax, oats, barley, and potatoes; eggs are largely exported. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The staple mfr. is linen. The fisheries on the coast and inland are important. About three-fourths of the whole county are owned by the Irish Society and the Twelve Trades' Companies of the City of London. The co. comprises 32 pars. and part of 14 others; the parl. and co. bor. of Londonderry (1 member), and the towns of Coleraine and Limavady. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Derry and South Derry—each returning 1 member.—2. Londonderry, or Derry, city, seaport, co. and parl. bor., with ry. stas., G. N. I. R. (Foyle Road), B. & N. C. R. (Waterside), Londonderry and Lough Swilly and Letterkenny Railway (Middle Quay), the first and last stas. being connected by tramway. The town, NW. co. Londonderry, on W. side of river Foyle, is 163 miles NW. of Dublin and 100½ miles NW. of Belfast by rail; 2164 ac., pop. 39,892. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. The city is situated on a hill (120 ft. high), called the "Island of Derry" (being nearly insulated by the winding of the river Foyle), and 5 miles above the point where the river expands into Lough Foyle. The suburb called Waterside stands on the opposite bank of the river, which is spanned by the beautiful Carlisle Bridge, 1200 ft. in length; it was constructed at a cost of £100,000. The ancient walls of Londonderry still remain, and encompass the city for nearly a mile. A quadrangular area, called the Diamond, is situated in the centre of the city, from which four of the principal streets branch off and lead to the original gates. There are many fine public buildings, including the Cathedral, R. C. Cathedral, Foyle College (founded 1617), public libraries, &c. The New Guildhall was erected in 1890 at a cost of £16,000. The Magee Protestant College is 1 mile from the city; the Ebrington military barracks are at Clooney, Waterside. The trade of Londonderry is extensive and important, but the linen mfr. has declined since 1822. There are extensive shirt factories, distilleries, several tanneries, iron and brass foundries, flour mills, and tobacco manufactories. Shipbuilding is carried on. The coasting trade of the port is very extensive. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Butter, pork, eggs, cattle, and grain are shipped in large quantities to Glasgow, Liverpool, &c. Coal, timber, and foreign produce are largely imported. The North American steamers from Liverpool call at Moville, near the entrance of Lough Foyle, to receive mails, passengers, and goods for America, and also on the return voyage. The greatest depth of the Foyle (which forms the harbour) is about 33 ft., and the depth is about 12 ft. at low water; the quayage extends to about 5700 ft. The Foyle fisheries are very important, large quantities of salmon being sent to London. The city, which arose from an abbey founded by St. Colomb about 546, was originally and is still popularly called Derry ("oak grove"); it acquired the prefix London in 1613 when it received a charter of incorporation from James I. It has sustained several sieges, the severest being that of 1688–89, which lasted 105 days. This celebrated siege is commemorated by a monument erected in the city to the Rev. George Walker, who directed its affairs at that time. The diocese of Derry includes cos. Londonderry and Tyrone, together with parts of cos. Antrim and Donegal. The bor. returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 5710 electors.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday, with cattle market on Friday. Luda was the name given to this place in ancient times, being derived from the stream called the Lud. The town was famed for the number of its monastic establishments. In modern times the trade of the town consists mainly in supplying the surrounding agricultural district with merchandise; there is some iron-founding and brewing. An annual wool market is held in July. The grammar school, endowed in the reign of King Edward VI., was rebuilt in 1869; the late Lord Tennyson, poet-laureate, was partly educated here. The Louth Canal extends to the mouth of the Humber; it was constructed in 1761, at a cost of £12,000.

Louth.—a maritime co. in NE. of Leinster province, and the smallest co. in Ireland; bounded N. by co. Armagh, NE. by co. Down, E. by the Irish Sea, S. by co. Meath, and W. by cos. Meath and Monaghan; greatest length, N. and S., 28 miles; greatest breadth, 18 miles; average breadth, 10 miles; coast-line about 49 miles; area, 202,731 ac. (697 water), or less than 1 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 65,820, of whom 60,171, or 91.5 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 4218, or 6.4, Protestant Episcopalians; 980, or 1.5, Presbyterians; and 296, or 0.4, Methodists. Along the coast, which is low and sandy, are Carlingford Lough, between Louth and Down, Dundalk Bay, and the estuary of the Boyne. The Carlingford peninsula in the NE. is almost wholly occupied by a range of mountains, whose summits attain their greatest alt. in Carlingford mountain, 1935 ft. The rest of the surface, with the exception of a small hilly district in the SW., is level or slightly undulating. The principal streams are Fane, Glyde, Dee, White, and Boyne. The soil is generally fertile, the country having a fine appearance with rich woods and verdant fields; it is rich in antiquities. Granite is the prevailing rock among the mountains; clay slate and limestone underlie the surface of the other districts. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Coarse linens are manufactured to some extent. The fisheries are valuable and extensive, and include an oyster fishery in Carlingford Lough. The co. comprises 59 pars. and part of 8 others, the co. of the town of Drogheda, and the towns of Drogheda, Dundalk, and Ardee. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Louth and South Louth, each returning 1 member. The two parliamentary constituencies together contain 10,961 electors.—2. Louth, par. and vil., mid. co. Louth, on river Glyde, 6 miles SW. of Dundalk—par., 17,832 ac., pop. 3262; vil., pop. 221; P.O., T.O.; has remains of a priory, originally founded by St. Patrick. (containing also Kirkley par.), 2178 ac., pop. 29,850; par., 1631 ac., pop. 23,385. Market day, Wednesday. Not long ago Lowestoft was a quiet fishing station, but it has become a thriving and important town, chiefly on account of the impetus given to its industries by the construction of a harbour, piers, and docks, and by the extension of the railway. These improvements have given life to an extensive shipping traffic, while the fisheries, for which the port has long been famed, have risen to great importance and value. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) It is also a much frequented seaside resort, and is provided with parks, pleasure grounds, esplanades, and model yacht ponds. The Corporation has instituted an electric tram service, and controls the science, art, and technical schools. On the cliff is Lowestoft High Lighthouse, 53 ft. high, with revolving light 123 ft. above high water and seen 17 miles, and on the Ness, ½ mile distant, is Lowestoft Low Lighthouse, 48 ft. high, with occulting light 40 ft. above high water and seen 11 miles. The new dock (covering between 10 and 11 acres), opened in 1883, with its fish market, is used by drift-net boats; while trawlers have accommodation at the old dock and fishmarket. Lowestoft occupies the most easterly point of land in England. The herring fishing is its great industry, connected with which there are boatbuilding, sail making, and rope and twine making. There are also large oil mills, and coach works. Lowestoft was made a municipal borough in 1885. The Dutch fleet was defeated by the Duke of York in a famous naval engagement off Lowestoft in 1665.

Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Macclesfield has an agreeable position on an eminence in proximity to the district known as Macclesfield Forest. It had an early appearance on the stage of history owing to its being a part of the estates of the Earls of Mercia before the Conquest. It was besieged and taken by the Parliamentarians under Sir William Brereton during the Civil War. Afterwards it supplied 4 regiments of 700 men each for the service of Charles II., while he was at the head of his army in Scotland. In 1745 it was occupied by the forces of Prince Charles. Silk mfr. in nearly all its branches forms the staple trade. The first silk mill was opened in 1756. For many years the silk throwsters of Macclesfield supplied material to the Spitalfield weavers. The town has extensive mfrs. of upholsterers' trimmings, a few cotton and smallware factories, and some breweries. Coal mines and slate and stone quarries are worked in the vicinity. The fine old church of St. Michael, founded in 1278, is its most interesting building. There are technical schools and a public library. In the vicinity are coal mines, slate and stone quarries. Macclesfield was incorporated in the reign of Henry III., and was made a parliamentary borough in 1832. It returned 2 members to Parliament from 1832 until 1885, when it was disfranchised.

Market days, Thursday and Saturday. Antiquaries affirm that there can be no doubt that this town had ancient British and Roman associations. During the Saxon era its name was Medwegeston ("town on the Medway"), and in Domesday Book it appears as Medestane. In more modern times the town has historical associations with the revolts of Wat Tyler (1381), Jake Cade (1450), and Sir Thomas Wyatt (1554). For its share in the last-mentioned rising it was disfranchised by Queen Mary, but received a new incorporation from Queen Elizabeth. In 1648, Maidstone having declared for the King, was stormed and captured by the Parliamentarians under Fairfax. There is a free library, museums, art galleries, and schools of science and art. Pennenden Heath, one mile N. of the town, is a public recreation ground. All Saints Church (probably of 14th century), 227 ft. by 91 ft., is one of the largest parish churches in the kingdom. M. is illuminated by electric light. In the district are various well-known paper mills; other leading occupations being the mfr. of oil, brewing, malting, iron founding, and the mfr. of agricultural implements. The principal trade, however, is in hops, Maidstone being the centre of a great hop district. The river is from 12 to 15 ft. deep at Maidstone, and is navigable for heavy barges. Andrew Broughton, mayor of the town, read the death sentence to King Charles I. Maidstone returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from Edward VI. until 1885, when its parl. limits were reduced by the exclusion of the Hamlet of Loddington.

Occupying a splendid position at the edge of the Chase of Malvern, on the E. slopes of Malvern Hills, this town has long been popular as a health resort and watering-place, and may be considered the chief seat of British hydropathy. Some of the establishments for the water treatment are of palatial appearance. The purity and abundance of the spring-water, and the excellence of the climate, have given Malvern its high repute, and thousands of invalids make it their home. The trade is mostly connected with the supply of requisites for visitors. Malvern was the seat of a celebrated monastery founded in the time of Edward the Confessor; the monastery was afterwards converted into a Benedictine priory; the church of the priory, a fine specimen of ecclesiastical architecture, with some fine old windows, is now the par. church. Malvern College (1865) is a proprietary school on the model of the great public schools. Madame Goldschmidt ("Jenny Lind," 1821–1887) is buried here.

Man, Isle of, situated in the Irish Sea, 16 m. S. of Burrow Head, Wigtownshire, 27 miles SW. of St. Bees Head, Cumberland, and 27 miles W. of Strangford Lough, co. Down; greatest length, NE. to SW., 33 m.; greatest breadth, E. to W., 12½ miles; area, 145,325 ac., pop. 54,752. The island is served by the I. o. M. R., and the Manx Northern Ry. A precipitous islet, called the Calf of Man, is situated off the SW. extremity, and contains about 800 acres. On the Isle of Man itself a range of mountains runs NE. to SW.—from Maughold Head to the Calf—occupying the greater part of the island, the highest elevation being Snaefell (2034 ft.), to the summit of which there is a railway. From the heights may be witnessed scenery which is justly celebrated for its loveliness and its picturesque variety. Amidst the mountains are the sources of the Sulby, the Neb, the Glass, and other streams. The island contains no lakes. The coast on the SW. is rugged and precipitous, the cliffs in some places rising sheer from the sea to a height of over 1400 ft.; on the SE. it is generally low, with gradual elevations towards the mountains. On the E. are numerous creeks and bays, including Douglas Bay and Laxey Bay. Clay slate is the formation of the greater part of the island; granite and other eruptive rocks have burst through in one or two localities. Lead, copper, zinc, and iron are the principal minerals; the lead ore especially is rich and plentiful. The land generally is in a high state of cultivation, scientific farming having greatly increased its richness and fertility. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) All along the coast sea fishing is actively prosecuted, and gives employment to several thousands of fishermen. For anglers the various streams present exceptional attractions, being well stocked with trout, &c. The shipping is almost wholly connected with coasting trade, which shows a considerable amount of activity. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Mfrs. are inconsiderable, and in the main consist of Manx cloth, cordage, nets, and canvas. Railway communication exists between the various towns, and there are numerous excellent roads. Few places can point to more interesting antiquarian features than those found in the Isle of Man. Druidical remains and Runic monuments are numerous; and among ancient buildings special mention should be made of Castle Rushen (947), Rushen Abbey (1154), and Peel Castle. The modern building of Castle Mona (1801) is now used as a hotel. Man has a highly interesting history. In early years it frequently changed hands, passing and repassing at various times under the dominion of the Welsh, the Scots, the Northumbrians, and the Norse. By Magnus VI. of Norway it was ceded to Alexander III. of Scotland in 1266. About the beginning of the 15th century the island was bestowed upon Sir John Stanley, and subsequently remained in the possession of the Derby family—the head being "King of Man"—until it was surrendered to the Parliamentarians in 1651, after the famous and heroic defence attempted by Lady Derby. Thereafter it was granted to General Lord Fairfax, but at the Restoration it again went to the Earl of Derby, in which attachment it remained until 1736. The lordship of Man then came by inheritance to the Dukes of Atholl, and in 1829 its final reversion to the Crown was effected by purchase. The island has a distinct bishopric, in the province of York, with the designation of Sodor and Man; the former name being derived from the Sudoreys, or Southern Islands of Scotland, which were at one time politically connected with them. The bishopric is supposed to have been founded by St. Patrick in 447. The island has a government and constitution of its own, also laws, law officers, and courts. The House of Keys, which controls its legislature, is very ancient; the two supreme judges are called deemsters. The government and laws of the island have been well described by the celebrated novelist Hall Caine. The laws are still promulgated in the old Manx language, a dialect of Gaelic. Man has 17 pars.; the principal towns are Douglas, Castletown, Ramsey, and Peel. Castletown is the ancient capital, but DOUGLAS (which see) is the chief town and the seat of government.

Lancashire, on rivers Irk, Irwell, and Medlock, 31 miles E. of Liverpool and 183 miles NW. of London by rail—co. bor., 12,935 ac., pop. 543,872; par., 1646 ac., pop. 132,316; parl. bor., 7960 ac., pop. 475,356. Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. It forms a continuous town with Salford, which, however, is a distinct co. bor. This busy and opulent city, whose mfrs. have gained celebrity in every part of the world, possesses a history that is more ancient, and of more general interest, than that of the majority of our great industrial centres which have come prominently before the public only in comparatively recent times. Although the particulars regarding its early existence are scanty, and by no means indubitable, there are reasonable grounds for the conjecture that Manchester was the seat of a British stronghold, situated at the place which is still called Castlefield. That it was a Roman station of considerable magnitude is beyond question. A portion of its Roman wall still exists, and other relics of a Roman occupation have been disinterred in abundance. Its Roman name (supposed to be derived from the British Mancenion, the "place of tents") was Mancunium, hence the Saxon Manceastre. Little information concerning its Saxon associations has been preserved, but it was at one time annexed to Northumbria, and suffered much during the inroads of the Danes. Shortly after the Conquest the whole country between the Ribble and the Mersey was granted to Roger of Poictiers. When the woollen mfrs. were introduced into England during the reign of Edward III. (1327–1377) Lancashire became the centre of the industry, and from that period the prosperity of Manchester may be dated. The cotton trade, with which the city is peculiarly and lastingly identified, was in its early days the cause of two deplorable pestilences (1605 and 1645) arising from infected imports of the material from Smyrna. In an account of Manchester of date 1650 its mfrs. are described as comprising "woollens, frizes, fustians, sack cloths, mingled stuffs, inkles, tapes, and prints." In 1643 the city was captured from the Royalists by Sir Thomas Fairfax; and in the rebellions of 1715 and 1745 it showed active and practical sympathy with the Stuart cause. Conspicuous events in its subsequent annals are:—Cheetham College founded (1653); cotton goods first exported (1760); Bridgwater Canal opened (1761); Manchester and Liverpool Ry. opened (1832); Manchester made a parl. bor. (1832) and a mun. bor. (1838); bishopric founded (1847); Owens College opened (1852); Manchester declared a city (1853); Town Hall opened (1877); Manchester Ship Canal (commenced 1887, opened 1894). Three circumstances especially gave power and direction to the trade of the city:—(1.) The success of the great work of the Duke of Bridgwater (assisted by James Brindley), who in 1758 began the system of inland navigation, and gave Manchester a splendid waterway for traffic; (2.) the introduction of machinery in cotton spinning, which occurred late in the 18th century; and (3.) the opening of the Manchester and Sheffield Railway in 1830—the second in the kingdom. The town has played an important part in modern politics, having been intimately associated with the initial proceedings connected with the great reform agitation, while it was also the headquarters of action in the struggle for the repeal of the corn laws. Great distress prevailed in the city, and in fact throughout Lancashire, during the civil war in America, at which time the dearth of raw material paralysed the staple trade in cotton. Manchester possesses some magnificent public buildings, mostly of modern date. The Royal Infirmary owes its origin to two concerts given by Miss Jenny Lind in order to raise a fund for the purpose. The Royal Exchange is a fine edifice, erected in 1867; the Corporation Art Gallery, in Doric style and designed by Sir Charles Barry, contains a notable collection of pictures. But by far the most important building is the Town Hall, completed in 1877 at a total cost of £1,053,264. It covers 8000 square yards, and has more than 250 apartments. The principal tower is 260 ft. high, and there is a splendid peal of 21 bells. The Free Trade Hall is seated for 5000 people. The chief ecclesiastical building is the cathedral, a Gothic structure, originally the parish church, made a collegiate church by royal charter in 1422. Alexandra Park (60 ac.) and Peel Park are the principal public grounds, and there are several others connected with the city. At the head of the educational institutions stands the Victoria University (Owen's College), the nucleus of which was founded by John Owen. Victoria University received its charter in 1880, and it has power to confer degrees. The city also has several denominational colleges, such as the Lancashire Independent College, the Primitive Methodist College, St. Bede's Roman Catholic College, &c. Chetham College or Hospital and Library are celebrated institutions; the latter (the first free library in Europe) containing a very rich collection of MSS. At the Grammar School (founded 1519) Thomas de Quincey (1785–1859) and Harrison Ainsworth (1805–1882) received education. Other educational institutions include the Whitworth Institute (1888), now wholly devoted to technical instruction, a technical school at Salford, Municipal School of Art, &c. Central Manchester now consists of immense piles of warehouses and offices, in their extent unequalled by any in the world. Nearly all the factories have been removed to the outskirts of the city, and to the villages and towns in the environs. Cotton, however, does not constitute the sole great industry of the city. Woollen and silk fabrics are manufactured in vast quantities. Engineering, and the making of machinery of all descriptions, employ thousands of the people, as also do various large chemical works. The water supply is derived from Longdendale (area of drainage ground, 19,300 ac.) and from Thirlmere (area of drainage ground, 11,000 ac.); the distance from Woodhead, Longdendale, is 18 miles; from Thirlmere, Cumberland, 96 miles. Manchester returns 6 members to Parliament (6 divisions—viz., North-West, North, North-East, East, South, and South-West, 1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 3 to 6 members in 1885, when its parliamentary limits were extended. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 66,268 electors. Salford returns 3 members (3 divisions—viz., North, West, and South, 1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 2 to 3 members in 1885.

Manchester Ship Canal extends from Eastham, NW. Cheshire, to Manchester, and is 35½ miles in length; its depth throughout is 26 ft., shortly to be increased to 28 ft., and its bottom width—except from Barton Aqueduct to the Dirks, where it is 170 ft.—120 ft. The canal was commenced in 1887, and was formally opened by her late Majesty Queen Victoria in May 1894; the cost of construction was upwards of £15,000,000. The rise of 60½ ft. between Eastham and Manchester is divided between 4 sets of locks at Latchford, Irlam, Barton, and Mode Wheel; the terminal locks, opening into the Mersey, are at Eastham. It is supplied by the Mersey and Irwell. The principal docks are at Manchester, and are equipped with the latest and most efficient appliances, including a grain elevator with a capacity of 40,000 tons. At Barton the Bridgwater Canal is carried across by means of a swing aqueduct worked by hydraulic power. There are several permanent railway bridges, swing road bridges, and fixed bridges at different points, the latter having a minimum height of 75 ft. above ordinary water level. The canal is in direct communication with all the inland navigations of the country.

Galway; greatest length, NW. and SE., 67 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 53 miles; average breadth, 34 miles; coast-line, about 200 miles; area, 1,380,390 ac. (58,350 water), or 6.5 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 199,166, of whom 194,504, or 97.7 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 3790, or 1.9, Protestant Episcopalians; 591, or 0.3, Presbyterians; and 281, or 0.1, Methodists. The co. is served by the M. G. W. R. and G. S. and W. R. Along the coast, which is bold and rugged, are Clew Bay, Blacksod Bay, Broad Haven, and Killala Bay; and the promontories of Achill Head, Erris Head, Benwee Head, and Downpatrick Head. Among the islands, which are numerous, the largest are Achill, Clare, Inishturk, Inishbofin, and Inishkea. The irregular peninsula of Belmullet, on the NW., projects between Broad Haven and Blacksod Bay. Much of the surface is of a wild and mountainous character, especially in the western districts, where the summits range from 1000 to 2688 ft. The valley of the Moy and the country E. of Castlebar consist of low-lying land well suited for pasture or tillage. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mountains are chiefly of quartz and mica-schist, and mountain limestone or limestone gravel is prevalent in other parts. Black marble is found in the SW., and iron ore occurs at various places. The principal rivers are the Moy, Gwishenden, and Owenmore; there are numerous mountain streams. The largest loughs are Conn, Carra, Carrowmore, and Feeagh, while Loughs Mask and Corrib are on the S. border. Agriculture—grazing rather than tillage—gives the chief employment. The fisheries along the coast and the salmon fishery in the Moy are very productive; there is some mfr. of linen. The co. comprises 57 pars. and part of 5 others, and the towns of Ballina, Westport, Castlebar (the co. town), Ballinrobe, Swineford, and Claremorris. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 4 divisions—viz., North Mayo, West Mayo, East Mayo, and South Mayo, each returning 1 member; the representation of Mayo was increased from 2 to 4 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 33,724 electors.—2. Mayo, par. and ham., E. co., Mayo, 3 miles S. of Balla; 11,847 ac., pop. 1743; P.O.

Merioneth, maritime co., N. Wales, bounded N. by Carnarvonshire and Denbighshire, E. by Denbighshire, SE. and S. by Montgomeryshire and Cardiganshire, and W. by Cardigan Bay; greatest length, NE. to SW., 45 miles; greatest breadth, NW. to SE., 30 miles; area, admin. co., 422,018 ac., pop. 48,852. The parliamentary constituency contains 9714 electors. The co. is served by the G. W. R., Cam. R., Festiniog Ry., and partly by the L. & NW. R. The coast-line is alternately cliffs and stretches of sand, and the co. generally is the most mountainous in Wales, although some of the mountains of Carnarvonshire rise to greater elevations. Merioneth abounds in wild and romantic mountain scenery, beautiful and fertile valleys, and fine views of sea and lake and river. The greatest heights are Aran Mowddwy (2970 ft.) and Cader Idris (2929 ft.) The chief rivers are the Dee, the Mawddach, and the Dovey. Waterfalls and small lakes are numerous, the largest of the latter being Bala Lake (4 miles long and 1 mile broad). Having generally a poor soil, with large stretches of moor quite beyond a profitable cultivation, Merioneth does not appear as a successful agricultural co., except in the valleys, where there are many fertile tracts. Reclamation of land has been successful in some parts of the co. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Mfrs. are insignificant, excepting woollen and flannel goods, which are made chiefly at Dolgelly. Considerable quantities of slate and limestone are quarried; manganese is found at Barmouth and Llanbedr. Merioneth contains 39 pars. and the towns of Bala, Barmouth, Corwen, Dolgelly, Festiniog, Mallwyd Towyn, and Harlech. It contains no parl., co., or mun. boroughs. It is in the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

Merse, the most southerly division of Berwickshire, but popularly the whole of Berwickshire, and in either sense the largest and richest tract of champaign country in Scotland; in ancient times it included all the flat country between the Lammermuirs and the Cheviots, and was called March, a form of the name which gives the title of Earl of March to the Earl of Wemyss.

Mersea, island, Essex, on N. side of mouth of river Colne, 8 miles SE. of Colchester; is 4¾ miles long and 2 miles broad, possesses fertile soil, is noted for its oysters, and is defended by a strong sea-wall; is divided into the 2 pars. of East and West Mersea—East Mersea, 1991 ac., pop. 218; P.O.; West Mersea, 3185 ac., pop. 1306; P.O., T.O.; a Benedictine priory was at West Mersea.

Mersey, river, Cheshire and Lancashire; is formed in Derbyshire by the union of the rivers Goyt and Etherow, and passes across the low plain between the moors and the Irish Sea, which it enters by a magnificent estuary; by its own course and by that of its affluents (the Irwell and the Weaver) it comes in contact with the vast agricultural and manufacturing industries of this district, making it, after the Thames, the most important river of England; is 70 miles long, including 16 miles of estuary, which varies in breadth from 3 miles above Eastham to ⅜ mile between Liverpool and Woodside, and 2 miles at New Brighton where it enters the sea; it has more than 70 ft. of water in its deepest part at low water spring tides, and therefore affords ample anchorage for the largest vessels. The range of tide is considerable, being 32 ft. at spring and about 10 ft. at neap tides. The sea channels are wide anu deep, and have an excellent system of buoyage and lighting. The Mersey Railway Tunnel, extending under the bed of the river between Woodside, Birkenhead, and George's Dock, Liverpool, was opened in January 1886; and electric train service was inaugurated in 1903.

Mersey and Irwell Canal, Cheshire and Lancashire; consists of a series of short cuts and deepenings, for improving and extending the navigation of the Mersey and the Irwell, between Warrington and Manchester, and of a cut, 8 miles long, between Runcorn and Warrington.

Yorkshire, on right bank of Tees estuary, 3 miles NE. of Stockton—parl. bor., 4466 ac., pop. 116,546; co. bor. and par., 2685 ac., pop. 91,302. Middlesbrough is an almost unparalleled example of rapid growth; in 1831 its population was 383. It was incorporated in 1853, enfranchised in 1867, and made a co. bor. in 1888. It dates from 1829, when its site was occupied by a solitary farmhouse, representing the ancient priory of St. Hilda; in that year its erection as a port for the shipment of coal was suggested by the construction of the Stockton and Darlington Ry., which would bring the great coal fields of Durham into easy access. The first ship was freighted with coal at Middlesbrough in June 1831. Originally founded as a coal-exporting port, Middlesbrough quickly became, with the discovery of the mineral riches of the Cleveland district, the principal seat of the English iron trade. This trade dates from 1840, when the works of Messrs. Bolckow & Vaughan were established on the banks of the Tees. There are now numerous blast-furnaces and large iron and steel works; there are also shipbuilding yards, chemical works, potteries, and a salt trade. There is a large dock 1200 ft. long, and an anchorage area of 20 ac. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The town is well laid out, and has many handsome public buildings; the Municipal Buildings (1889) were erected at a cost of £110,000. A park of 72 ac. was presented to the town by Mr. H. W. F. Bolckow, the first mayor and the first member of the borough. Middlesbrough returns 1 member to Parliament; its parliamentary limits were extended in 1885; the parliamentary constituency contains 18,542 electors.

Middlesex, an inland co. adjoining London; it formerly included a great part of the Metropolis, but that area was severed from it by the Local Government Act of 1888; it is now bounded by Hertford on the N., cos. of London and Essex on the E., Surrey on the S. (the river Thames forming the boundary), and by Buckinghamshire on the W.—area, administrative co., 148,700 ac., pop. 792,314; the ancient or geographical co. (exclusive of the pars. situated in the administrative co. of London) contains an area of 149,668 ac., and a pop. of 798,738. The co. is served by the G. W. R., L. & NW. R., G. C. R., M. R., G. N. R., G. E. R., L. & SW. R., Met. and Met. Dist. Rys. An ancient district of the small tribe of the Middle Saxons under the East Saxon kings, it was "given in farm"—i.e. annexed to the City of London—by King John, one of the London sheriffs from that time acting as Sheriff of Middlesex. In 1889 it regained its county government, and now has its own High Sheriff, Lord Lieutenant, &c. There are no Middlesex Assizes; the County Council sits, and the Quarter Sessions are held at the Middlesex Guildhall, Westminster; hence there is no county town, nor is there a county constabulary, the whole co. being served by the Metropolitan Police. The appearance of the country is generally flat, with slight elevations on the Herts border. The Thames, with its affluents the Colne, Lea, and Brent, are the only rivers, although there are several smaller streams. Farming is carried on with much spirit and with scientific attention. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are numerous market gardens in connection with the metropolitan supplies. The county comprises 60 civil parishes and the mun. bors. of Ealing and Hornsey. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 7 divisions—viz., Enfield, Tottenham, Hornsey (part of), Harrow, Ealing, Brentford, and Uxbridge, each returning 2 members; the parliamentary constituencies together contain 128,680 electors. Though wholly within the area of "Greater London," the W. and NW. parts of the county are largely rural.

R., 19 miles S. of Hereford—mun. bor. and par., 5008 ac., pop. 5095; parl. bor., pop. 5095; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. The mfrs. include smelting and tinplate-works, also chemical works and sawmills. Monmouth is pleasantly situated in a fine valley, sheltered by hills, near the junction of the rivers Wye, Monnow, and Trothy. It has considerable historical interest. During the Saxon era it was a stronghold, intended to check the Britons who descended from the fastnesses of Wales. It has some remains of a famous castle, the favourite residence of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and the birthplace of Henry V. Monmouth received a charter of incorporation from Edward VI.; it was made a parliamentary borough in the reign of Henry VIII. It unites with Newport and Usk in returning 1 member to Parliament; the constituency contains 10,520 electors.

Monmouthshire, maritime co., in W. of England, bounded N. by Herefordshire and Brecknockshire, E. by Gloucestershire, S. by the Bristol Channel, and W. by Glamorgan; greatest length, N. to S., 32 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., 27 miles; area, admin. co., 349,712 ac., pop. 298,076. On the coast-line (22 m.) the only indentation is that formed by the mouth of the Usk. The co. has a hilly appearance in the N. and NW., and culminates in the Sugar Loaf (1955 ft.); it is served by the G. W. R., L. & NW., and Rhymney Ry. Although an English county, Monmouthshire is within the Welsh Registration Division (No. XI.), while it is included in Wales for all special Acts of Parliament except the Early Closing Act. The chief rivers are the Wye and Usk; the latter is navigable for large vessels as far as Newport. Other streams are the Monnow, Ebbw, and Rhymney. The streams afford excellent sport for anglers. Towards the seaboard the land is low and flat, and to guard against the encroachments of the sea extensive sea walls and earthworks have been erected. Wheat and rye are the chief crops produced in the fertile valleys of the Usk; oats and barley are grown in the uplands. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) While farming and grazing are leading employments, there are in the W. large industries connected with coal mines, iron mines, and iron mfrs. Welsh is still largely spoken in the county; it has a great interest for antiquaries. It has many remains of ancient feudal castles, and among its ecclesiastical ruins are the splendid remains of the abbeys of Llanthony and Tintern. The co. contains 159 pars., the Monmouth Boroughs (Monmouth, Newport (co. bor.), and Usk—1 member), and the mun. bors. of Abergavenny and Monmouth. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Llandaff. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 3 divisions, viz., Northern, Western, and Southern, 1 member for each division; the representation of Monmouthshire was increased from 2 to 3 members in 1885; the parliamentary constituencies contain 41,479 electors.

R., 6½ miles S. of Welshpool by rail—3390 ac., pop. 1034; parl. bor., pop. 1034; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. Montgomery is a very old place, having claims even to an ancient British origin. Of the castle, a fortress founded in the reign of William the Conqueror, very slight remains exist; it was reduced by the Parliamentarians. There are no mfrs. Montgomery is a corporate town, with charter of Henry VII.; the station is 1½ mile WNW. of the town. The Montgomery District of Parliamentary Boroughs (including Montgomery, Llanfyllin, Llanidloes, Machynlleth, Newtown, and Welshpool) returns 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 3228 electors.

Montgomeryshire, inland county of North Wales, bounded N. by Denbighshire, E. and SE. by Shropshire, S. by Radnorshire, SW. by Cardiganshire, and W. and NW. by Merioneth; greatest length, 37 miles; greatest breadth, 30 miles; area, 510,111 ac., pop. 54,901. Montgomeryshire is almost wholly mountainous and bare, but on the Shropshire side there are some fertile and beautiful valleys; there is water connection with Chester and Shrewsbury by the M. Canal. The principal rivers are the Severn (with its affluents the Vyrnwy, Tanat, and Rhiw) and the Dovey. Excellent harvests of wheat, oats, barley, &c., are gathered in the valleys; but in the higher districts the soil is poor, consisting mostly of moorland and sheep-walks. A superior breed of sheep ("cluns") is raised, also the fine description of Welsh ponies known as "Merlins." (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal mineral product is slate; there are lead mines at Llanidloes and Llanbrynmair. Welsh flannel is the staple mfr. Montgomeryshire contains 72 pars., with parts of 3 others, the Montgomery Boroughs (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Llanidloes and Welshpool. It is in the dioceses of Bangor, Hereford, and St. Asaph. It returns 1 member to Parliament; the constituency contains 7845 electors.

Forfarshire, at mouth of river South Esk, 10 miles E. of Brechin, 30¾ miles NE. of Dundee, 90 miles NE. of Edinburgh by rail; par., 4181 ac., pop. 14,027; parl. burgh and royal burgh, pop. 12,401; town and mun. bor., 12,427; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. Montrose is a place of considerable antiquity; it was sacked by the Danes in 980, and was a principal town of Scotland in the middle of the 13th century; the celebrated Marquis of Montrose was born here. The town is situated on a flat peninsula at the N. side of the mouth of the South Esk. To the W. of the town the river expands into a broad tidal lagoon known as the Montrose Basin, and is crossed by a suspension bridge and a railway viaduct. The harbour, comprising the reach of the river from the suspension bridge to the sea, is naturally deep and well sheltered, and the quays are well constructed and commodious; on the N. side of the entrance to the harbour are two fixed lights visible 10 and 11 miles; there is some trade with the Baltic and Canada. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are mfrs. of linen yarns, and extensive woodyards. There is an excellent golf course, known as the East Links; the Mid Links are recreation grounds in the town. Montrose is the headquarters of a fishery district extending from Broughty Ferry to Gourdon. Sir Alexander Burnes, the Eastern traveller (1805–1841), and Robert Brown, botanist (1773–1858), were natives. The Montrose Burghs return 1 member to Parliament; they Musselburgh is said to derive its name from a mussel bank near the mouth of the Esk, having been previously called Eskmouth; it was partly destroyed by the English in 1544 and again in 1548; and it was the headquarters of Cromwell's army for nearly two months in 1650. The old Tolbooth, built in 1590, of materials from the ruins of the chapel of Loretto, is an interesting building; it is now used as the municipal buildings. Loretto School bears a high reputation, and is conducted on the methods of English public schools. The Links of Musselburgh, on the E. side of the town by the shore, have long been noted as a golfing ground; they are also used as a racecourse at which an annual meeting is held. The mfr. of nets and twine is an important industry; paper-making, brewing, and tanning are carried on; there are confectionery works. The fishing industry of the burgh is confined to that portion of it called Fisherrow, which is reached by four bridges across the river Esk, three of which are foot bridges and one a stone bridge of 5 arches. New Forest.—occupies most of the SW. corner of Hants. It is about 14 miles long N. to S., and 16 miles broad E. to W.; about one-fourth of the area consists of enclosed plantations, and the remainder of open woods, bog, and heath. The absence of underwood gives a beautiful park-like appearance to the New Forest, which contains several large villages—Lyndhurst being the forest capital. Oak and beech are the principal trees; the former have furnished a great deal of timber for the royal navy. A race of half-wild ponies is bred. The New Forest was created by William the Conqueror; the area is about 92,000 ac., of which 64,000 ac. are Crown demesnes. The entire plantations are under the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, while the forest laws and customs are regulated by the Court of Verderers, numbering seven members. The district is much frequented by artists and naturalists.—2. New Forest, par., 5 miles WSW. of Ravensworth, N. R. Yorkshire; 3003 ac., pop. 28.

Newbury, mun. bor., market town, and par., with ry. sta., G. W. R., also served by Lambourn Valley Ry., Berks, on river Kennet, 17 miles SW. of Reading and 53 miles WSW. of London by rail; par. and bor., 1828 ac., pop. 11,061; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. It is affirmed that Newbury rose upon the ruins of the Roman Spinæ, which bequeathed its name to the hamlet of Speen, close by. The town was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth. During the Civil War two battles were fought in the vicinity, both indecisive. Agricultural produce supports the bulk of the town's trade; while maltings and corn mills employ a number of the inhabitants. A wool market is held annually in July. Most of the traffic in goods is carried upon the Kennet and Avon Canal. In St. Nicholas' church is the tomb of John Winchcombe, commonly called "Jack of Newbury," and F. Baily, the astronomer (1774–1844), was a native.

R., Carmarthenshire, 9 miles ESE. of Cardigan and 26 miles NW. of Carmarthen; 208 ac., pop. 855; P.O., T.O.; is an ancient place and was at one period called Dinas Emlyn. It is said that the Romans had a fortress here, and that on its site was built the castle from which the town takes its name. The castle, which forms the chief object of interest, was held for the king during the Civil War, since which time it has fallen into decay. There is good fishing in the Teifi.

Newcastle under Lyme, parl. and mun. bor., market town, and par., with ry. sta., N. S. R., Staffordshire, on Lyme Brook, 16 miles NW. of Stafford, 40 miles S. of Manchester—parl. bor., 6954 ac., pop. 60,666; mun. bor. and par., 671 ac., pop. 19,914; the parliamentary constituency contains 9746 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. The name of Newcastle is derived from a castle which was built here about 1180, in place of an older one at Chesterton under Lyme; no traces of the fortress remain; part of the site is occupied by a foundry. The earliest charter is supposed to have been granted by Henry II. Historically the town has no special interest. Much of its modern importance is due to its proximity to the Potteries, in which many of the inhabitants obtain employment. Ironworks and collieries are in the neighbourhood. The mfr. of hats, at one time the leading industry, has been abandoned; but several other mfrs., such as brewing, malting, tanning, and papermaking, are conducted with fair activity. Army clothing is also manufactured. A branch canal—the Newcastle Lower Canal—connects the town with the Grand Trunk Navigation to the Trent, Mersey, Severn, and Thames. Newcastle under Lyme returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members until 1885, when the parliamentary limits were extended so as to include a large part of Wolstanton par.

Newcastle upon Tyne, parl. and co. bor., city, seaport, market town, and county of itself, Northumberland, on r. Tyne, with ry. stas. (Central, New Bridge), N. E. R., and numerous suburban stations, 10 miles from its mouth, 124½ miles SE. of Edinburgh and 268½ miles N. of London by rail; parl. and co. bors., 5355 ac., pop. 215,328. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Newcastle was originally called Pons Ælii, from a bridge erected (120) by the Emperor Hadrian; its modern name originated from a fortress, of which the keep still remains, built (1080) by Robert Curthose, son of William the Conqueror. It was an important strategic key during the old border feuds between England and Scotland, and suffered in the Civil War. Modern Newcastle, through the rich mineral products of the neighbourhood, and the industrial genius and activity of the inhabitants, has attained a first position among the great centres of British business enterprise. Being in the midst of one of the largest coalfields in England, it exports immense quantities of that commodity; also iron, chemicals, hardware, glass, earthenware, and machinery. Important industries are shipbuilding, the mfr. of locomotive and marine engines, ordnance, tools, firebricks, hemp and wire ropes, cables, anchors, sails, &c. The port (which is one of the Tyne Ports) has a very extensive traffic, greatly facilitated by the Northumberland and Tyne Docks, which cost £2,500,000. For upwards of 10 miles, both banks of the river are lined with quays, shipbuilding yards, and factories; the principal quay (1 mile long) forms a thoroughfare. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX). A series of fine bridges across the Tyne to Gateshead. The famous High Level Bridge (1846–50) of Robert Stephenson has an extreme length of 1375 ft.; the upper part, 112 ft. above high water, is used by the railway, beneath which runs the roadway. Another high-level bridge is being constructed by the Ry. Co. The Swing Bridge (opened 1876), constructed by Sir W. Armstrong, is one of the largest of the kind in the world, and allows free navigation of the river. St. Nicholas' Church (1359, restored 1879), a very fine building, with lantern tower (194 ft.), a peal of 8 bells, and an altar-piece by Tintoretto, is now the cathedral. The central railway station and the general market are remarkable for their commodiousness and convenience, while an electric tramway system has been instituted. The Corporation Buildings are large and imposing; other public buildings include the Exchange, Market, Public Library, Natural History Museum, &c. There are several hospitals, infirmaries, and charitable institutions. Richard Grainger, a builder in the town, now deceased, is credited with the great improvements effected in the construction of new streets and buildings. The school system both for elementary and secondary pupils is excellent; special institutions are an institute of mining, a college of medicine, a college of physical science attached to Durham University, and the Laing Art Gallery. Several public grounds have been supplied for the inhabitants; they include Elswick Park, Armstrong Park, Leazes Park, and Brandling Park; Jesmond Dene, a picturesque glen laid out as a public park, is within the municipal boundary. A bishopric was founded for Newcastle in 1882, and on the 13th June of that year the place was created a city. It returns 2 members to Parliament, and has 35,635 electors.

Newport.—mun. bor., market town, and par., with ry. sta., I. o. W. C. R., and capital of the Isle of Wight, 5 miles S. of Cowes and 10¼ miles SW. of Ryde by rail, and 91 miles from London; mun. bor. and par., 504 ac., pop. 10,911; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. Possessing railway communication with Cowes, Ryde, Sandown, &c., Newport is a flourishing and attractive town, with an endowed grammar school (1612) and an endowed school for girls (1761). Its central position makes it the headquarters of large numbers of visitors, bent upon touring through the island. The supplies required by visitors, and by the surrounding rural districts, give rise to most of the trade. Has cement works and brewing. In the neighbourhood are Carisbrooke Castle, Albany (formerly Parkhurst) Barracks with extensive camping ground attached, and Parkhurst Prison, formed from the hospital of the barracks. Communication with the mainland is easy, e.g., by rail to Cowes or Ryde, and thence by steamer to Portsmouth and Southampton. Newport returned 2 members to Parliament from the reign of Elizabeth until 1867, and 1 member until 1885.—2. Newport, parl. and co. bor., seaport, market town, and par., with ry. stas. (High Street), G. W. R., Monmouthshire, on river Usk, 12 miles NE. of Cardiff and 140¾ miles W. of London by rail—co. bor. and par., 4431 ac., pop. 67,270; parl. bor., pop. 61,465. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. To distinguish it from the ancient Caerleon, not far off, this town received from Giraldus the name Novus Burgus, while the Welsh called it Castel Newydd—i.e., Newcastle. Edward II. granted the town its first charter of incorporation. Close to the river's edge are some towers and portions of the walls of the castle erected by the Earl of Gloucester, son of Henry I.; the remains of the building now form part of a brewery. In 1839 Newport was the scene of a great Chartist riot, the rioters being 10,000 armed miners, of whom 20 were shot dead in an encounter with the troops. There are 3 commodious docks belonging to the Alexandra (Newport and S. Wales) Docks and Ry. Company. The river opposite the docks is about 1000 ft. wide, and is navigable for vessels of the largest size; the shipping trade of the port is active. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Shipbuilding, iron-founding, steam engine and boiler mfrs., railway plant works, chain cable and anchor works, chemical works, and agricultural implement mfrs., are the chief local employments. The great trade of the place is the export of manufactured iron and coal. Newport is one of the Monmouth District of Parliamentary Boroughs, which returns 1 member to Parliament.—3. Newport, urb. dist., market town, and par., with ry. sta., L. & NW. & G. W. R., Shropshire, on Shrewsbury Canal, 11 miles WSW. of Stafford and 17½ miles ENE. of Shrewsbury; urb. dist. and par., 768 ac., pop. 3241; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. The town has a pleasant situation near the border of Staffordshire. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and was incorporated as early as the reign of Henry I. It has a town hall, a market house, and corn exchange, a grammar school (1656), and several charitable institutions. Mfrs. of machinery and agricultural implements employ some of the inhabitants. Considerable trade is carried on with neighbouring collieries, iron mines, and limestone quarries.—4. Newport, small port, town, and par., Pembrokeshire, on Newport Bay, 6 m. NE. of Fishguard; 4494 ac., pop. 1337; P.O., T.O. Newport ranked as a corporate borough, and received its charter in 1192. The town is a sub-port to Cardigan; exports corn, butter, and slates, and imports timber, limestone, and coal. The castle (a 13th century building, now modernised) overlooks both town and bay.—5. Newport, vil., Cornwall, on W. side of Launceston, from which it is separated by a small inlet of the river Tamar; sent 2 members to Parliament until 1832, when it was incorporated with Launceston; P.O., T.O.—6. Newport, eccl. dist., Bishop's Tawton par., Devon, mostly within the municipal limits of Barnstaple; pop. 1862; P.O., T.O.—7. Newport, par. and vil. with ry. sta., G. E. R., Essex, on river Cam, 3½ miles SW. of Saffron Walden; 1730 ac., pop. 914; P.O., T.O.—8. Newport, vil., in par. and 1½ mile SE. of Berkeley, Gloucestershire; P.O.—9. R., North-Riding Yorkshire, on river Tees, 2 miles SW. of Middlesbrough; P.O., T.O.

Newport, seaport town (police burgh) and quoad sacra par., with ry. stas. (East N. and West N.), N. B. R., Forgan par., NE. Fife, on Firth of Tay, opposite Dundee (1½ mile distant), and 2½ miles by rail NE. of S. end of the Tay Bridge—quoad sacra par., pop. 2063; town and burgh, pop. 2869; P.O., T.O.; has an excellent ferry harbour, having been constituted by Act of Parliament in 1822 the ferry station from Fife to Dundee. The town is pleasantly situated, and is a favourite summer resort.

Newport, or Newport Pratt.—seaport town with ry. sta., M. G. W. R., W. co. Mayo, on river Newport and on Clew Bay, 7 miles N. of Westport ry. sta. and 11 miles NW. of Castlebar; pop. 471; P.O., T.O. Newport is resorted to for bathing. Vessels of 200 tons can reach the quay. Grain is the chief export. The salmon fishery on the river is important. Newport House is the seat of the O'Donnells, the proprietors of the town.—2. Newport, rivulet, W. co. Mayo. See BELTRA.—3. Newport, town, W. co. Tipperary, on river Mulkear, 4 miles E. of Castleconnell ry. sta., 5 miles S. of Birdhill ry. sta., and 11 miles NE. of Limerick; pop. 637; P.O., T.O. Newport gives the title of Baron to the Earl of Roden.

Newport (or Northern) Division, The, parl. div. of Shropshire; pop. 52,386.

Newport House, seat, 6 miles W. of Weobly, Herefordshire.

Newport Pagnell, urb. dist., market town, and par., with ry. sta., L. & NW. R., Bucks, at confluence of the rivers Ouse and Ousel, 4 miles NE. of Wolverton and 14 miles NE. of Buckingham—urb. dist. and par., 3432 ac., pop. 4028; P.O., T.O. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Pagnell is a name derived from the Paganell family, the ancient holders of the manor. The castle was anciently a place of strength, and was taken by the Parliamentarians in 1643. Sir Samuel Luke, who had charge of the garrison in 1645, is said to have been the original of Butler's "Hudibras." The town is situated on rising ground, commanding a fine stretch of surrounding country. The church (restored 1828) is an ancient and elegant structure.

Newport Pratt, Mayo. See NEWPORT.

Newquay, urb. dist., par., watering-place, and town, with ry. sta., G. W. R., Cornwall, at the W. extremity of Watergate Bay, 6 miles W. of St. Columb Road sta. by rail and 11 miles N. of Truro; urb. dist. and par., 310 ac., pop. 2935; P.O., T.O., called New Quay. From its attractive coast scenery and its sheltered position, Newquay has become a favourite resort of tourists and pleasure seekers, and has good hotels and boarding-houses; important pilchard fisheries are carried on; there are coastguard and lifeboat stations.

Newrath, vil., in co. and near Waterford.

Newrath Bridge, hamlet, in co. and 2 miles NW. of Wicklow.

Newry ("the yew tree"), parl. bor., market and seaport town, par., and urb. dist., with ry. stas. (Dublin Bridge and Edward Street), G. N. I. R., also served by Bessbrook and Newry Electric Railway, cos. Armagh and Down, on Newry river and canal, 5 miles from the head of Carlingford Lough, 44¼ miles S. of Belfast, and 74¼ miles N. of Dublin by rail—par., 22,361 ac., pop. 19,007; parl. bor., 2551 ac., pop. 13,137; urb. dist., 697 ac., pop. 12,405. The parliamentary constituency contains 2307 electors. Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Trains run in connection with the L. & NW. Ry.'s steamers at Greenore for Holyhead. Newry is a clean, well-built, and thriving town. It is one of the most important Irish ports for the exportation of cattle and all kinds of agricultural produce to Liverpool, Glasgow, &c. The imports consist chiefly of timber, coal, slates, cotton, wine, groceries, &c., and the wholesale trade in these commodities is very extensive. Vessels drawing 15 ft. of water can reach the town by the Newry Canal from Warrenpoint. The river, separating co. Down from co. Armagh, is here crossed by four stone bridges and the canal by four others. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Among other industries are brewing, tanning, rope making, and the mfr. of machinery and implements of husbandry. There are large granite quarries, with cutting and polishing works, in the vicinity. The granite is capable of receiving a very high polish, and monuments, chimney-pieces, &c., made from it are exported. Newry is an ancient place; it had an abbey founded in 1175, and a castle, which was destroyed by Edward Bruce in 1318; the town was nearly destroyed by the Duke of Berwick in 1689, but revived with the making of the canal in 1741. Newry gives the title of Viscount to the Earl of Kilmorey. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

Norfolk, a maritime co. in E. of England, bounded N. and E. by the North Sea, S. by Suffolk, and W. by Cambridgeshire; greatest length, from N. to S., 42 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., 66 miles; area, 1,314,612 ac., pop. 476,553. The coast line is about 90 m. in extent. The co. is served by the G. E. R., and M. and G. N. Jt. Ry. All along the seaboard the land is low, and has suffered greatly from encroachments of the sea. Many thousands of acres, however, have been reclaimed from the waters of the Wash, and the work is still being prosecuted. A level surface characterises the appearance of the co., which is watered by the Yare, with its tributaries the Waveney, Bure, and Wensum, and by the Ouse and its tributaries.

The first three rivers unite the BROADS (which see). Light sand and loam is the prevailing character of the soil, which generally has been rendered productive through the excellence of the system of farming that has been pursued. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The barley of the co. has especial celebrity. Great attention is paid to live stock, and the cobs and cart horses of the co. are well known. Large numbers of geese and turkeys are supplied to city markets. Besides the great herring fishery of Yarmouth, there is all along the coast an important and valuable fishing industry, which employs many thousands of the people. Norfolk comprises 700 pars., the co. and parl. bors. of Great Yarmouth and Norwich, the parl. and mun. bor. of King's Lynn, and the mun. bor. of Thetford. It is mostly in the diocese of Norwich. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 6 divisions—viz., North-Western, South-Western, Northern, Eastern, Mid, and Southern, 1 member for each division; parliamentary constituencies contain 60,033 electors.

Market day, Wednesday. Northallerton is the capital of the North-Riding. The industries are not extensive, but include malting, brewing, tanning, and brickmaking. There is a large trade in agricultural produce, and fairs for horses, cattle, and sheep. Near the town, at the place called Standard Hill, was fought the "Battle of the Standard" (1138), in which the Scottish king David I. was defeated by Thorstan, Archbishop of York. Northallerton returned 2 members to Parl. from 1640 until 1832, and 1 member until 1885.

Northampton, parl. and co. bor., and capital of Northamptonshire, on river Nen, with ry. stas., L. & NW. R. (Castle), and M. R., 21½ miles NW. of Bedford and 65¾ miles NW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 1972 ac., pop. 76,070; co. bor., 3469 ac., pop. 87,021. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. During Saxon times the appellations of the place was Hamtune, Northafendon, &c., while in the Domesday Book it appears as Northaneton. The distinguishing prefix "North" was adopted to prevent confusion with other places having similar names—e.g., Southampton. The town has a high degree of historical interest. In 921 it was a possession of the Danes, by whom it was burnt in 1010. After the Conquest it was a royal residence; and beginning with 1179, was the meeting-place of several parliaments, one of which ratified the "Treaty of Northampton," which acknowledged the independence of Scotland (1328). Henry VI. was defeated and taken prisoner here in the sanguinary battle of the 10th July 1460. The old castle and walls, dating from the 11th century, were demolished in 1662. Objects of considerable interest to antiquaries are the Knights Templars' church, one of the four round churches in England, and a beautiful Eleanor cross. All Saints Church was rebuilt (1680) by Wren, after being burnt in the great fire which nearly destroyed the town in 1675. Northampton is the principal seat of the boot and shoe manufacture in England. There are monthly horse and cattle fairs. There is a racecourse a little east of the town on which the races of the Pytchley Hunt are held in March and November. Leather mfr. is largely carried on; also brewing, malting, and iron and brass founding. The town has a canal from the Nen, uniting with the Grand Junction system. The bor. returns 2 members to Parliament and has an electorate of 12,352.

Northamptonshire, or Northampton, south-midland county of England, bounded N. by Leicestershire, Rutland, and Lincolnshire, E. by Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire, and Bedfordshire, S. by Bucks and Oxfordshire, and W. by Warwickshire; greatest length NE. to SW., about 65 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., about 29 miles; area, administrative co. (including the Soke of Peterborough, which is also in itself an admin. co.), 638,612 ac., pop. 335,628. The co. is served by L. & NW., M., G. C., G. N., and East and West Junction Rys. Although the surface of the county is generally hilly there are no elevations of considerable altitude, the highest being near Daventry where Arbury Hill reaches 804 ft. The NE. part of the county belongs to the Fen district. In some localities, particularly the W. and SW., the scenery is especially attractive; while here and there throughout the co. rich woods and well-watered vales afford pleasing aspects. The chief rivers are the Nen and the Welland; the Avon forms a part of the N. boundary of the co., the Cherwell of the SW. boundary, and the Leam of the W. boundary; the Ouse has its rise near Brackley in the S. The canal system includes the Union and Grand Junction Canal, besides other similar waterways. On the uplands the soil is a fine brown loam, but the richest portion is found in the black mould of the Fen district. Throughout the whole co. farming is successfully prosecuted, all kinds of cereal and green crops being raised; while upon the splendid pastures large numbers of cattle are reared, principally for the London market. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Northampton is celebrated for its ash trees, old oaks, and elm avenues. Lias and oolite are the prevailing geological formations. Iron is largely found, and although worked as early as the time of the Roman occupation, its modern mfr. dates only from 1850, since which year remarkable progress has been made by the encouragement of the industry and its consequent productiveness. Apart from ironworking, the great industry of the co. is centred in the mfr. of boots and shoes in the town of Northampton and the towns of the middle of the co. Northamptonshire contains 346 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Northampton (2 members), part of the parl. and mun. bor. of Peterborough (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Daventry. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Peterborough. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 4 divisions—viz., Northern, Eastern, Mid, and Southern, 1 member for each division.

Northumberland, the most northerly co. of England, bounded N. by the river Tweed, which separates it from Berwickshire, NW. by the Cheviot Hills, separating it from Roxburghshire, E. by the North Sea, S. by Durham, and W. by Cumberland; greatest length, N. to S., 70 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., 46 miles; area, 1,291,515 ac., pop. 603,119. The co. is served by the N. E. R. and N. B. R. Somewhat triangular in outline, Northumberland possesses a varied surface, principally rugged, and rising gradually from the coast to the hill ranges of the Cheviots on the borders of Scotland and Cumberland. In the centre of the co. the hills are undulating, and clad with green; in the W. and SW. they are bleak, and covered with moss and heather. On the coast are the Coquet, Farne, and Holy Islands. Fertile valleys stretch from spurs of the Cheviots eastward towards the coast, and the co. is well watered by several celebrated rivers, the Alne, Coquet, Blyth, Wansbeck, Till, Tyne, and Tweed. In those localities where farming is most diligently pursued—i.e. near the coast and in the valleys—the soil is a rich clayey loam. Barley, wheat, and beans form the chief crops; and considerable and lucrative employment is found in the rearing of the famous Cheviot sheep, and of short-horned Durham cattle. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Among anglers the Northumberland rivers and their estuaries are held in high repute for the excellence of their sport, and their fisheries also have a high commercial value. A large number of boats are employed in the sea fisheries. Geologically the conspicuous feature of the co. is its immense coal formation; other districts consist of various sandstones, and the porphyry, trap, and limestone of the Cheviots. Lead ore is mined at Fallowfield, Haydon Bridge, Newburgh, and Allenheads; at the last-named place zinc ore is found. In addition to coal and lead works, with their auxiliary employments, Northumberland has an enormous industrial system, shown most prominently by the ironworking, shipbuilding, ropemaking, chemical mfr., glass making, pottery making, &c., on the Tyne. The co. is divided into 523 pars., and includes the parl. and co. bor. of Newcastle upon Tyne (2 members), the parl. and mun. bors. of Morpeth (1 member) and Tynemouth (1 member), and the mun. bor. of Berwick upon Tweed. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 4 divisions—viz., Wansbeck, Tyneside, Hexham, and Berwick upon Tweed, 1 member for each division. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 56,529 electors.

SE. of Warrington and 18 miles NE. of Chester; urb. dist. and par., 1397 ac., pop. 17,611; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. Some very old houses are to be seen in the town, which is rather irregularly built. Subsidences frequently take place owing to the pumping out of the brine. Salt works and rock salt mines are here very important, and maintain an enormous trade; within a radius of 7 miles from Northwich nearly two million tons of salt are produced yearly. Marston mine is 300 ft. deep; its roof is supported by pillars of salt. The salt springs of Northwich are said to have been known to the Romans. The rock salt of the locality was discovered accidentally in 1670. There are here public brine baths; also breweries and chemical works.

R., on river Yensum, 18½ miles W. of Yarmouth and 114 NE. of London by rail—parl. and co. bor. and par., 7556 ac., pop. 111,733. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Norwich is a city commanding especial interest on account of its ecclesiastical associations and its regularly picturesque appearance, the latter having earned for it the designation of "The city in an orchard." It is supposed to have been the Caer Gwent of the British, and the Venta Icenorum of the Romans. Nord-wic (i.e. North-town) first appears as its name in the Saxon Chronicle. The cathedral, in which the greater portion of the historical interestand importance of the town is centred, was founded in 1096 by Bishop Herbert de Lozinga, or Lorraine, and is one of the most perfect examples of Norman architecture which can be found in England. The cloisters are especially beautiful. Beyond the cathedral, however, which abounds with interesting architectural remains, among which the ancient castle (now used as a museum), with its splendid Norman keep, deserves especial notice; also do St. Andrew's Hall (a fine Gothic edifice), the Bishop's palace (1318), the Guildhall (15th century), &c. St. Andrew's Hall is the scene of the great triennial musical festival which has given Norwich an enviable fame in art circles. The Roman Catholic Church (St. John the Baptist), built by the Duke of Norfolk, is one of the largest erected in England since the Reformation. Archbishop Parker was a native, and Sir Thomas Browne, author of "Religio Medici," is buried in St. Peter, Mancroft. Industrially and commercially Norwich may be considered a prosperous town, for although its textile mfrs., which dated from the 14th century, have declined to some extent, other trades flourish vigorously; they embrace mustard and starch mfrs., brewing, ironworking, and boot and shoe making. Agricultural implements are made in large quantities. Norwich returns 2 members to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 19,510 electors.

Little is known concerning the early history of the town. A stronghold was built by William the Conqueror, during whose reign also the town was fortified. During the Barons' Wars Nottingham was a centre of turbulence, and was taken several times, being partially destroyed in the reign of Stephen. Edward IV. was proclaimed here in 1460. Charles I. was besieged in Nottingham in 1642, and in the following year the town surrendered to Colonel Hutchinson, the Parliamentarian commander. The castle, founded by William I., was dismantled in the time of the Commonwealth, and after being rebuilt as a dwelling-house was burnt by the Reform rioters in 1830. It is now restored, and contains the "Midland Counties Art Museum," the property of the corporation. The University College was established in 1881; has in connection with it well-equipped technical schools and a natural history museum; there is also a municipal school of art. Lacemaking and the mfr. of cotton hosiery are very important industries, nearly all the supply of British laces being made in the town. Silk, flax, and woollen mills are also in operation; the mfr. of weaving and netting machinery is largely carried on; and iron-foundries, breweries, and tanneries are successful branches of industry. There are extensive recreation grounds, including Bulwell Forest and the public playgrounds. There are many fairs; the cattle market occupies 7 acres. Nottingham returns 3 members to Parliament (3 divisions—viz., West, East, and South, 1 member for each division); these parliamentary constituencies contain in all 41,174 electors.

Nottinghamshire, Nottingham, or Notts, north-midland county of England, bounded N. by Yorkshire, E. by Lincolnshire, S. by Leicestershire, and W. by Derbyshire; greatest length, N. to S., about 50 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., about 25 miles; area, 540,123 ac., pop. 514,459. The co. is served by the G. C. R., M. R., G. N. R., L. & NW. R., and L. D. & E. C. R. Towards the E., Nottinghamshire has a level surface, while westwards it is marked by gentle hills of no great elevation, which tend to impart some variety to the scenery. The eastern portion comprises the vales of the Trent and Belvoir; in the S., between the Soar and the Smite, are the Wolds, consisting of level tracts of moor and pasture; while in the W. are the remains of the royal forest of Sherwood. The Trent flows through the co. from SW. to NE., and is navigable for river vessels. All the other streams are tributaries of the Trent; they include the Soar, Erewash, and Idle. By the Nottingham and Grantham Canal, and the Fosse Dyke Canal, there is connection between the Trent and the Witham. The soil is varied, but cannot be spoken of as being highly productive. Green crops are the principal growth, and the common cereals are cultivated; stock-rearing is also carried on. Hop plantations are numerous, while in proximity to Nottingham and Newark there are many market gardens. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Magnesian limestone and old red sandstone overlying coal prevail in the W.; in the other districts are formations of marl, new red sandstone, and lias, with quartz and gravel in the Forest. There are several coal mines in the county. The principal mfrs. are laces of various descriptions. Hosiery and cycle mfrs., woollen mills, cotton mills, and iron foundries are also largely productive. Nottinghamshire comprises 265 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Nottingham (3 members), and the mun. bors. of East Retford, Mansfield, and Newark. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Southwell. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 4 divisions—viz., Bassetlaw, Newark, Rushcliffe, and Mansfield, 1 member for each division. The parliamentary constituencies contain in all 53,460 electors.

Oldham is one of England's great modern centres of manufacture. In 1760 it contained only about sixty dwellings, mostly thatched huts. Its rapid progress is due chiefly to its proximity to the Lancashire coal fields. These coal fields give employment to a considerable section of the population. The great majority of the people, however, are engaged in the staple mfrs. with which the name of Oldham is familiarly associated. The goods produced are principally fustians, velveteens, velvets, silks, cotton cords and yarns, sheetings, shirtings, drills, sateens, &c. The output represents the consumption of one-fourth of the entire bulk of this class of material produced in the county. Works for the mfr. of weaving machinery are very extensive. Foundries and engine works show great industrial activity. Public buildings include the Town Hall and municipal offices, the Lyceum with Science and Art School attached, Art Gallery and Museum, Free Library, &c. The Alexandra Park, covering 72 acres, is beautifully laid out and contains an ornamental lake. Four annual fairs are held. Oldham was enfranchised by the Reform Bill of 1832, and received its charter of incorporation in 1849. It returns 2 members to Parliament and has an electorate of 32,108.

Orkney, insular co. of Scotland, separated from Caithness by the Pentland Firth (6½ to 8 miles broad); area, 375·7 sq. m. or 240,476 ac.; civ. co., pop. 28,699, or 76 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 24,067; pop. of Pomona, or Mainland, 16,235. The Orkneys comprise 67 islands, 28 of which are inhabited, besides a large number of rocky islets or skerries. They are divided into 3 groups —the South Isles, comprising the large islands of Hoy, South Ronaldshay, and many smaller ones; Pomona, or Mainland, the largest island of the Orkneys; and the North Isles, comprising Rousay, Shapinshay, Westray, Papa Westray, Eday, Stronsay, Sanday, and North Ronaldshay. Except on the S. and W. sides, where the cliffs are bold and precipitous, the coasts of the islands are extremely irregular, abounding in bays and headlands. The surface—most elevated in Hoy, which is hilly—is generally low, and much interspersed with rocks, swamps, and lochs. The climate, prevailingly moist, is mild and equable for the latitude. The soil mostly consists of peat or moss, but is either sandy or of a good loam where the land is arable. The farms are usually of small size; oats, barley, and turnips are grown. Live stock, poultry, and eggs are largely exported. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) There is regular steam communication between Leith and Kirkwall, an active trade being kept up. Orkney forms one of the great Scottish fishery districts. Fishing and agriculture are the chief industries. There are 3 distilleries in Pomona. The Orkneys were known to the Romans as the Orcades, and seem to have been originally peopled by Celts. About the beginning of the 4th century the islands were visited by the Norse sea-rovers, who ultimately settled upon them. They were annexed to Norway in the latter part of the 9th century, and in 1468 were attached to Scotland as a pledge for the dowry of the Princess of Denmark who married James III. The people still retain some traces of their Scandinavian descent. Orkney comprises 21 pars., the parl. and royal burgh of Kirkwall (part of the Wick Burghs), and the police burgh of Stromness. It unites with Shetland in returning 1 member to Parliament. The entire constituency contains 7576 electors.

Oxford, parl. and co. bor., city, market town, and county town of Oxfordshire, with ry. stas., G. W. R. and L. & NW. R., chiefly in Oxfordshire but partly in Berks, between the rivers Cherwell and Thames (locally called Isis), 27 miles NW. of Reading and 63 from London by rail—parl. bor., 4674 ac., pop. 49,285; co. bor. 4719 ac., pop. 49,336 (the last census was taken during vacation). Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. As a great seat of learning Oxford has for centuries upheld a high celebrity throughout the world. It has also a history of great interest and importance. Already in the 9th century (under the names of Oxnaford, Oxenford, and Ousford) it appears as one of the leading towns of England; it was twice besieged by the Danes, and was eventually surrendered to Sweyn in 1013; was stormed by King Stephen in 1142; and was the meeting-place of the "Mad Parliament" in 1258. In its subsequent history the chief events include the fearful "town and gown" disturbance in 1354; the preaching of Wycliffe in the reign of Edward III.; the martyrdom of Ridley, Latimer, and Cranmer in the reign of the "Bloody Mary"; the "Black Assize" (a pestilence broke out during the Assizes) of 1577; the city's adherence to the cause of Charles I., and its siege by Fairfax; and the Jacobite riots of 1715. Oxford is not a trading town, and has no manufactures of special importance. Business is generally supported by supplying the wants of Oxford University, which now comprises 21 colleges and one independent hall (St. Edmund's). The oldest college is University College, which claims to have been founded by Alfred but really dates from 1249; others are All Souls (1437), Balliol (1268), Brasenose (1509), Christ Church (1532), Corpus (1516), Exeter (1314), Hertford (founded as Hart Hall in 1282 and incorporated in 1874), Jesus (1571), Keble (1869), Lincoln (1427), Magdalen (1458), Merton (1270), New College (1386), Oriel (1326), Pembroke (1624), Queen's (1340), St. John's (1555), Trinity (1554), Wadham (1613), Worcester (1714), and St. Edmund's Hall (1269). The private Halls are Marcon's, Pope's, Hunter Blair's, and Addis. Mansfield College (1886) and Manchester College (1889) are two non-university theological institutions; while Somerville College (1879), Lady Margaret Hall (1879), St. Hugh Hall (1886), St. Hilda's Hall (1898), and Cherwell Hall (1902) are educational establishments for women, who are not granted a degree, although admitted to the same lectures and examinations as the men. The total number of undergraduates is about 3500; owing to the increase in their number many now reside in lodgings in the town licensed by the University authorities, who also exercise control in the city amusements, and send twelve representatives to the Town Council. There are 85 professors and lecturers. Connected with the university are the following institutions:—the Bodleian Library (founded about 1602) with over 600,000 vols., the Ashmolean Museum, the Taylor Institution, University Galleries, Ruskin Drawing School, University Museum, Radcliffe Library, the University Observatory, Sheldonian Theatre built by Sir Christopher Wren (1664–1669), in which the annual commemoration ceremonies are held, the New Examination Schools (1882), &c. Oxford, besides its University, is celebrated for its splendid buildings. Christ Church Cathedral is a Norman and Early English edifice. The "Martyrs Memorial" is a monument to the memory of Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley. The handsome Municipal Buildings (1893–1897) contain the Public Library. Oxford University (6329 electors) returns 2 members to Parliament. Oxford City (8367 electors) returns 1 member.

Oxfordshire, south-midland co. of England, bounded N. by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire, E. by Bucks, S. by Berks, from which it is separated by the Thames, and W. by Gloucestershire; greatest length, 52 miles; greatest breadth, about 30 miles; area of admin. co., including the City and County Borough of Oxford, 480,687 ac., pop. 186,460. Most of the co. is level, but there are gentle undulations of surface, rising to 836 ft. at Broom Hill in the NW., which is the highest point of land. In the S. the Chiltern Hills stretch across the co. from Bucks to Berks. The chief rivers are the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, and Thame, all being tributaries of the Thames or Isis, which flows for about 70 miles along the S. border of the co. The Oxford Canal, in conjunction with the Coventry Canal, connects the Thames with the Severn, Mersey, and Trent. The co. is served by the G. W. R., L. & NW. R., and partly by G. C. R. The soil is a light loam, which is exceedingly fertile and in a high state of cultivation, agriculture receiving so much attention that the co. is justly held to be one of the most productive districts in England. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Excepting the N. district, Oxfordshire may be considered a well wooded co. Many of the events of the Civil War occurred in the co.; it has many antiquities, and is likewise noted for the beauty of its ecclesiastical buildings and the number of its mansions. The mfrs. are not important. The co. comprises 304 pars., the greater part of the parl. and co. bor. of Oxford (1 member, and Oxford University 2 members), and the mun. bors. of Banbury, Chipping Norton, Henley on Thames, and Woodstock. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Oxford. For parliamentary purposes the co. is divided into 3 divisions—viz. Northern or Banbury, Mid. or Woodstock, and Southern or Henley—1 member for each division.

Market day, Thursday. Paisley, originally called Passeleth ("the flat stone shoal"), sprang from the Abbey of Paisley, which was founded by Walter, High Steward of Scotland, about the year 1163. This abbey was burned by the English in 1307, and was not rebuilt till the 15th century. The nave is still used as the church of Abbey par., and the edifice now belongs to the Duke of Abercorn. Other public buildings include the Municipal Buildings, Clark Town Hall, County Buildings, and Free Public Library and Museum. There are four public parks. The Grammar School was founded by James VI. in 1576. Paisley was made a burgh of barony in 1488, and was granted a crown charter in 1665. It is now a great seat of manufacture. The mfr. of sewing thread made from linen yarn was introduced in 1722, and that of cotton thread is now the staple industry; the works of Messrs. Coats, now amalgamated with those of Messrs. Clark & Co., are the largest thread works in the kingdom, and probably in the world. Paisley was long famous for its plaids or shawls, but owing to changes in fashion the trade in these shawls has declined. Tapestry, embroidery, tartan, and carpet mfrs. are also carried on. There are extensive starch and corn-flour works, bleaching and dye works, chemical works, and engineering works, fireclay and pottery works. The river Cart was deepened in 1894. The harbour has an area of 5½ ac. and over 1900 ft. of quayage. There is tramway connection with Glasgow. An annual race meeting is held. Among other distinguished natives of Paisley are Robert Tannahill (1774–1810), poet; Alexander Wilson (1766–1813), poet and American ornithologist; and Professor John Wilson ("Christopher North," 1785–1854), poet and essayist. Peebles, roy. and mun. bor., par., and co. town of Peeblesshire, with ry. stas., N. B. and C. R., at the confluence of Eddleston Water and river Tweed, 18½ miles NW. of Galashiels, 23 miles S. of Edinburgh, and 54½ miles SE. of Glasgow by rail—par. (partly also in Selkirkshire), 16,610 ac., pop. 5810; royal burgh, pop. 3095; town (mun. burgh), pop. 5266; P.O., T.O. Market day, Tuesday. Peebles is finely situated in the valley of the Tweed, being well sheltered by lofty hills, and is a favourite summer resort, with golf course. There is a large hydropathic establishment near the town. The mfr. of tweeds and other woollen stuffs is carried on. Peebles was in early times a seat of the Scottish kings, was made a royal burgh in 1367, and was burned by the English in 1406. It was the birthplace of William Chambers (1800–1883) and Robert Chambers (1802–1871), publishers and authors.

Peeblesshire, or Tweeddale, an inland co. in the SE. of Scotland, bounded N. and NE. by Edinburghshire, E. and SE. by Selkirkshire, S. by Dumfriesshire, and W. by Lanarkshire; greatest length, N. and S., 29 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 21 miles; area, 347.8 sq. m., or 222,599 ac.; civ. co., pop. 15,066, or 43 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 9800. The co. is served by N. B. and C. Rys. From the narrow central valley of the Tweed the surface rises into hills and mountains, with fertile valleys or deep gorges between the ridges. Peeblesshire is watered by the Tweed and its tributaries, which include the Biggar, Manor, Eddlestone, &c. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The hills for the most part are grassy and softly rounded. The highest summit is Broad Law, 2754 ft., near the S. border. The streams in the glens and valleys afford good angling. Blue clay slate has been extensively worked, limestone is abundant, and coal is mined to some extent in the N. of the co.; ironstone also occurs. Sheep-farming is the main industry. The woollen mfr. is carried on at Peebles, Innerleithen, and Walkerburn. Antiquities include British and Roman camps, and the castles of Neidpath and Drochil. The co. comprises 14 pars., and the police burghs of Peebles and Innerleithen. It unites with Selkirkshire in returning 1 member to Parliament; the combined constituency contains 3619 electors.

Peel.—coast town with ry. sta., I. o. M. R., in W. of the Isle of Man, on Peel Bay, 11½ miles NW. of Douglas; pop. 3304; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. It is a favourite watering-place, and has good sands. The commercial importance of the town depends chiefly upon its prosecution of the sea fisheries, which are productive. There are mfrs. of boats, nets, sails, and ropes. At the end of Peel old pier is a fixed light visible 3 miles, and at east of north breakwater a fixed light visible 5 miles. The ruins of Peel Castle, mentioned in Scott's "Peveril of the Peak," and St. German's Cathedral stands on a rocky island here called Patrick's Isle; the towers which flank the mouldering walls of the castle are said to have been erected by the Earl of Derby in the 16th century. Tynwald Hill, celebrated in connection with the passing of the Manx laws (the "Acts of Tynwald"), is 3 miles to the SE.—2. Peel, eccl. dist., Deane par., SE. Lancashire, 3½ m. Pembroke ("head of the district"), parl. (contributory to Pembroke and Haverfordwest District of Boroughs) and mun. bor. and market town, with ry. sta., G. W. R., on navigable creek of Milford Haven, 9½ miles W. of Tenby—mun. bor., 4618 ac., pop. (including Pembroke Dock) 15,853; parl. bor., pop. 18,680; P.O., T.O. Market days, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. The founding of the town is supposed to have been contemporaneous with the founding of the castle (11th cent.), with which is associated all the history of the district. Pembroke Castle is said to have been the birthplace of Henry VII. It resisted for a long time the assaults of Cromwell's forces. The ruins show walls of 14 ft. in thickness. The town has now but little trade beyond that connected with the Government Dockyard, which occupies 90 ac. of ground, is strongly fortified, and has a fixed light visible 3 miles. The inhabitants of the locality are chiefly tradespeople and dockyard workers. The Pembroke District of Parliamentary Boroughs until 1885 comprised Pembroke, Milford, Tenby, and Wiston; since 1885 it also comprises Haverfordwest, Fishguard, and Narberth; it returns one member, and contains 6699 electors.

Pembrokeshire, a maritime co. of South Wales, washed by the sea on all sides excepting the NE. and E., where it is bounded respectively by Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire; greatest length, N. to S., about 30 miles; greatest breadth, E. to W., about 25 miles; area, civ. co., 395,151 ac., pop. 88,732; admin. co., 392,710 ac., pop. 87,894. The co. is served by the G. W. R. The coast line, which on the S. is rugged and inhospitable, shows several indentations of more or less importance to mariners; they include St. Bride's Bay and Milford Haven in the S., and Newport and Fishguard Bays in the N. Inland the surface of the co. displays a succession of green hills, with fertile valleys intervening. Among the Prescelly Hills the highest elevation (1764 ft.) is reached. The chief rivers are the Teifi, which separates the co. from Cardiganshire in the NE., the East Cleddau, and the West Cleddau. Considerable variety characterises the soil; in the S. it is very productive, and in the NW. it is excellently suited for barley growing; but in the hilly and coal districts it is very poor. Owing to the violence of the SW. wind there is comparatively little timber, excepting in sheltered spots. Oats, barley, and potatoes are the chief crops, all being raised under very careful farming. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Coal, lead, zinc, iron, and slate are the only minerals of the co. having a commercial value. From the number of English-speaking people in Pembrokeshire (chiefly through the settlement of a colony of Flemings, who adopted the English tongue), the co. has been called "Little England beyond Wales." The antiquities include St. David's Cathedral and numerous mediæval castles. The county contains 163 pars., the Pembroke District of Parliamentary Boroughs (see PEMBROKE), of which Haverfordwest (the co. town), Pembroke, and Tenby are mun. bors. The co returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 11,010 electors.

Perth (Barr-Tatha="the height on the Tay"), ancient city, parl., royal, and mun. burgh, par., river port, and co. town of Perthshire, with ry. sta., C. R., and also served by the N. B. and H. Rys., on river Tay, 21 miles WSW. of Dundee, 47¾ miles N. of Edinburgh via Forth Bridge, and 69½ m. via Stirling, 62½ miles NE. of Glasgow, and 442 miles NW. of London by rail—par., pop. 29,793; parl. burgh, pop. 32,866; royal burgh, pop. 33,566; mun. burgh and town, pop. 32,873. Market day, Friday. Perth is situated amid enchanting scenery, and is overlooked from a short distance by finely wooded eminences, which command magnificent views. Two public meadows or parks, called the North Inch (with racecourse and golf course) and the South Inch, extend along the right bank of the Tay, and on the opposite side of the river (which is crossed by a handsome 9-arched bridge, 840 ft. long) is the suburb of Bridgend; ¼ mile S. is Victoria Bridge, erected at a cost of £40,000 and opened in 1900. Perth was for some time called St. John's Town or St. Johnstoun, and was long regarded as the capital of Scotland, being a favourite residence of the kings. It still takes precedence of all royal burghs except Edinburgh. It is remarkable for the wealth of its historical associations. It was also remarkable for the magnificence of its ecclesiastical buildings, of which the ancient church of St. John still remains. St. Ninian's Episcopal Cathedral was completed in 1890. The General Convict Prison for Scotland, at the South Inch, is a very extensive building, having been originally erected in 1812 for French prisoners of war. A golf course was laid out in 1897 on Moncreiffe Island, a little SE. of the city. The chief industries of Perth are dyeing and the mfr. of ink and gauge-glasses; the dye-works of Messrs. Pullar are the largest in the world. The mfrs. of linen, winceys, carpets, floorcloth, ropes and twine, and chemicals are also carried on. There are several breweries and a distillery and iron foundries. Perth is an important centre for the sale of live stock and other agricultural produce. The salmon net fishings on the Tay produce a rental of about £17,000 per annum, of which Perth receives about £900. The river is navigable to the town for vessels under 200 tons. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The burgh returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 5247 electors.

Perthshire, east-midland co. of Scotland, bounded N. by Inverness-shire and Aberdeenshire, E. by Forfarshire, SE. by Fife and Kinross-shire, S. by Clackmannanshire and Stirlingshire, SW. by Stirlingshire and Dumbartonshire, and W. by Argyllshire; area, 2493.4 sq. m., or 1,595,774 ac., civ. co., pop. 123,283, or 49 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 90,410. The co. is served by the C. R., H. R., N. B. R., and in the extreme west by the West Highland branch of the N. B. R. Perthshire includes some of the grandest and most beautiful scenery in Scotland, combining features characteristic both of the Highlands and the Lowlands. The ranges of the Ochils and the Sidlaw Hills, which are parted by the estuary of the Tay, occupy the SE.; while the N. and NW. districts, to the extent of more than one-half of the entire county, are occupied by the mountains of the Grampian system, this Highland region being intersected by numerous lochs and glens. The rich and beautiful valley of Strathmore, extending from the SW. to the NE. across the whole co., lies between the base of the mountains in the N. and NW. and the lower ranges in the SE.; the fertile alluvial tract known as the Carse of Gowrie stretches between the Sidlaw Hills and the Firth of Tay; while the Carse of the Forth lies along the S. border. The general slope of the co. is towards the SE. The principal heights are Ben Lawers, 3984 ft.; Ben More, 3843 ft.; Ben-y-Gloe, 3671 ft.; Schiehallion, 3547 ft.; Ben Vorlich, 3224 ft.; Ben Ledi, 2873 ft., and Ben Venue, 2393 ft. The principal rivers are the Forth and the Tay. The largest tributaries of the Forth within the co. are the Teith, the Allan, and the Devon; while those of the Tay are the Tummel, the Garry, the Lyon, the Isla, the Bran, the Almond, and the Earn. The largest lochs are Lochs Ericht and Rannoch in the N., Lochs Tay and Earn in the NW., and Lochs Katrine, Achray, Vennachar, Lubnaig, and Lake of Menteith in the SW. The soils of this co. are of the most varied character,—rich deep clay or loam in the straths, a light sandy or gravelly soil in the hill valleys, and moorland on the higher lands. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Coal, copper, and ironstone are found in the Ochil Hills; varieties of slate occur in different parts of the county; limestone is quarried. Agriculture and sheep-farming are the chief industries. There are extensive deer forests, and the fisheries on the Tay are of very considerable value. The mfrs. of woollen and tartan stuffs, cotton, and linens are carried on. The ancient divisions of Perthshire, now only of local significance, were Athole, Breadalbane, Gowrie, Menteith, Methven, Perth, and Stormont. The co. comprises 71 pars., the parl. and royal burgh of Perth (1 member), and the police burghs of Aberfeldy, Abernethy, Alyth, Auchterarder, Blairgowrie, Callander, Coupar-Angus, Crieff, Dunblane, and Rattray. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., Eastern and Western, each returning 1 member. These parliamentary constituencies together contain 15,921 electors.

Peterborough, parl. and mun. bor. and city, in Soke of Peterborough, NE. Northamptonshire, with ry. stas., G. N. R. and G. E. R., on river Nen, at NW. boundary of Cambridgeshire, 14½ miles W. of March, 43 miles NE. of Northampton and 76¼ N. of London by rail—parl. bor., 6558 ac., pop. 32,205; mun. bor., 1878 ac., pop. 30,872. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Peterborough was called Medehamstede by the Angles until 970, and had its rise in the founding of a monastery (656), destroyed by the Danes in 870, and afterwards rebuilt. Upon its destruction by fire in 1116 the present cathedral was commenced, but was not completed till early in the 16th century. The cathedral is a noble edifice, its west front being unsurpassed by any other in the kingdom. Mary, Queen of Scots was interred here, July 1587; the remains were removed to Westminster Abbey in 1612. Here also Queen Catherine of Arragon was buried, 1536. A thorough restoration of the choir was commenced in 1884, and completed in 1889; during the work the site of a cruciform Saxon church was discovered in a crypt under the south transept. Among other buildings in the town may be mentioned the town hall, corn exchange, and county court offices. The educational institutions include a training college for church schoolmasters, a school of science and art, and a grammar school. Peterborough is an important railway centre, being connected with the G. N. R., and branches of the L. & NW., G. E., and M. Rys.; the G. N. R. have here large locomotive shops. It is the centre of a great agricultural district, and its markets for corn and fat stock, and fairs for cattle, horses, sheep, &c., are of considerable importance. Trade is carried on in malt, coal, and timber. Agricultural implements are manufactured. The bor. was incorporated in 1874. It returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 5954 electors.

Peterhead, parl. and mun. burgh, seaport town, and par., E. Aberdeenshire, on a small peninsula on N. side of Peterhead Bay, with ry. sta., G. N. S. R., 44½ miles NE. of Aberdeen by rail—par., 9170 ac., pop. 15,146; parl., police burgh, mun., and town, pop. 11,794; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. Peterhead was made a burgh of barony in 1593, but at this date the only part of the town existing was the fishing vil. of Keith-Inch, which stands on the extremity of the peninsula. Keith-Inch has now been insulated by the canal which connects the 2 harbours on either side of the isthmus. There are now 3 basins, hewn out of the solid rock, and 2 graving docks. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Peterhead is the centre of one of the 27 herring fishery districts of Scotland, and during the season of the herring fishing the pop. of the town is largely increased. Immense quantities of herrings are exported, chiefly to Baltic ports. Since 1788 a large number of vessels have been annually employed in the Greenland seal and whale fishing, but there have been great fluctuations, and the industry is practically extinct. Peterhead is the most easterly town in Scotland, and owing to its prominent situation and its position as regards the great fishing industry, of which it is the centre, it was selected by Parliament in 1884 for a national harbour of refuge, which is in course of construction by convict labour, a large prison having been erected to which all long sentence convicts are sent. The estimated cost of the harbour is £750,000. There is a Lloyd's signal station. On the west pier of the S. harbour is a fixed light visible 10 miles. Red granite is extensively quarried in the neighbourhood. Peterhead is one of the Elgin Burghs, which return 1 member to Parliament.

(Friary), L. & SW., 230 miles WSW. of London, (Millbay) G. W. R., 53 miles SW. of Exeter by rail and 245¾ SW. of London, and (North Road), L. & SW. & G. W. jt. sta.—parl. bor., 1993 ac., pop. 104,543; co. bor. and par., 2370 ac., pop. 107,636. Market days, Monday, Thursday, and Saturday. Plymouth, in the larger sense, consists of the "Three Towns" of Devonport, Stonehouse, and Plymouth. Plymouth proper is built upon 2 eminences and the hollow between them. The southern eminence is called The Hoe, and is laid out as a promenade and recreation grounds; here Drake was playing bowls when the approach of the Spanish Armada was announced. The market place covers nearly 3 acres. There are several colleges and educational establishments. The water supply was first introduced by Sir Francis Drake (1585), who was at that time mayor of the town. The supply comes from Dartmoor; its gathering area is 5360 acres. The mfrs. include sailcloth, brushes, rope and twine, earthenware, &c. There are shipbuilding yards, foundries, starch works, breweries, flour mills, flax mills, and limestone quarries. The exports include copper, tin, lead, and granite. The fisheries are very productive. Steamers sail regularly for North America, the Cape, Australia, and New Zealand. The accommodation for merchant vessels includes Sutton Pool and Mill Bay, at the latter of which extensive wet docks have been constructed; there are several other docks capable of accommodating the largest ships. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) As a naval station Plymouth is second only to Portsmouth, the spaciousness of the Sound affording anchorage to a large number of ships. The breakwater, constructed at a cost of £1,580,000, is nearly a mile in length. At its W. extremity is Plymouth Lighthouse, 76 ft. high, with occulting light 63 ft. above high water and seen 13 miles. In the same tower is a fixed light 39 ft. above high water and visible 11 miles. Plymouth is well protected by a chain of forts at Mill Bay, where there are barracks; the Citadel E. of the Hoe commands the Sound. The dockyard, arsenal, and other Government establishments lie along the Hamoaze (the estuary of the Tamar and Tavy) to the W. of the town. Plymouth was called Tamarworth by the Saxons, and Sudtone (i.e. South Town) by the Normans, and was a mere fishing hamlet until after the reign of Henry II., when its natural advantages as a seaport and naval station were perceived, and the town rapidly rose in importance. In 1346 it sent 26 ships and 600 men to the siege of Calais, and its contribution to the fleet on the threatened invasion by the Spanish Armada was second only to that of London. In 1620 the Mayflower set sail from here for America with the Pilgrim Fathers. The name of Plymouth was taken in 1439, when it received its charter from Henry VI., since which period Plymouth has regularly returned 2 members to Parliament, and now contains 18,016 electors. The bor. was extended in 1896 to include Compton and other suburbs, and again in 1897, when 45 ac. of the par. of Pennycross were taken in; in 1899 a further portion of this par. was included.

Plympton Maurice, or Plympton Earle, par. and small market town with ry. sta. (Plympton), G. W. R., Devon, near the river Plym, 1 mile SE. of the sta. and 4½ E. of Plymouth—par., 232 ac., pop. 1117; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. Plympton is an ancient place, and was long a borough by prescription, sending 2 members to Parliament from Edward I. until 1832. At the E. end of the town are the relics of a castle said to have been demolished in the reign of King Stephen. At the grammar school, a well-endowed institution founded in 1658, Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723–1792), a native of Plympton, received his education. In addition to the weekly markets there are markets on the first Monday of every month for horses, cattle, and sheep. Plympton House, once the seat of the Treby family, is now a lunatic asylum.

Portobello is now within the municipal burgh of Edinburgh, with which it was amalgamated in 1896, and with which it is connected by tram and rail. According to tradition, the name was derived from a cottage erected there in 1742 by a sailor, who so named it from his having served at the capture of Porto-Bello in Central America under Admiral Vernon; was a small vil. about 1765, when the first brick and tile work was established there, and attracted attention as a watering-place about the beginning of the present century; has fine sands, an esplanade about 1½ mile long, lined by villas and modern boarding-houses, and a promenade pier, at which Forth steamers call during the season. The Sea Water Baths here, erected by the Edinburgh Corporation at a cost of £30,000, are considered to be amongst the finest and most complete in the kingdom. They include swimming, Turkish, and medicinal baths of every variety. There are public parks and golf greens. P. has brick works, potteries, bottle works, and a papermill. Portsmouth.—parl. and co. bor., naval station, seaport, and par., with ry. stas. (Town, high and low level, Harbour, and Fratton Junction), L. & SW. and L. B. & S. C. Jt. R., Portsea Island, Hants, opposite the Isle of Wight, 27 miles SE. of Southampton and 95 SW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 4662 ac., pop. 188,095; co. bor. and par., 5010 ac., pop. 188,133. Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Portsmouth is divided into the four districts of Portsmouth, Portsea, Landport, and Southsea; Portsmouth being the barracks and garrison town, Portsea the site of the great naval dockyard, Landport the artisans' quarter, and Southsea a modern watering-place with fine esplanade and two piers, baths, and assembly-rooms; has steamer connection with London, Southampton, Dublin, etc. Portsmouth is the largest naval establishment in the world, and the strongest fortified place in the kingdom, being protected by a complete chain of forts, including the forts at Spithead, the forts on the heights of Portsdown, and the lines of Hilsea. The harbour is 4 miles in length by nearly 3 miles in width, with an entrance 220 yards in breadth, permitting access to the largest vessels at low water. On the eastern shore are the ordnance gun wharf (with armoury) and the great Government dockyard (with the Admiralty House and the Royal Naval College, and School of Naval Architecture) covering an area of 300 ac.; it has dry docks and building slips at which men-of-war of the largest size are constructed. At Gosport, opposite (with which there is communication by floating bridge and steam launches), are the Clarence victualling-yard and the Haslar Hospital. Here is the chief shore depôt for submarines, but others are being established at the various naval ports. The port of Portsmouth extends 9 miles eastward to Emsworth and 5 miles westward to Hill Head, at the entrance to Southampton Water; the trade, both foreign and coasting, is considerable. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The industries (except brewing) are all immediately connected with the naval establishments. Some of the principal features of the place, besides those already noted, are the extensive barracks, 8 in number, of which 5 are in Portsmouth proper; the headquarters of the Royal Marine Artillery at Eastney; the hospitals at Landport and Hilsea; the convict prison at Portsea, which superseded the hulks in 1852; the Recreation Grounds for the military and naval forces; the Clarence Esplanade at Southsea, 2½ miles in length, with fine views of the anchorage at Spithead and the Isle of Wight; and Southsea Common, where the troops in garrison are assembled for reviews and field-days. There are numerous fine public buildings, including the Town Hall, which cost £140,000, and was opened in 1890. Charles Dickens (1812–1870) was a native. Portsmouth received its first charter from Richard I., was a naval station of some note in the reign of John, was fortified by Edward IV., and began to be of importance as a dockyard about 1554. Since the 23d year of Edward I. it has regularly returned 2 members to Parliament, and now contains 28,882 electors.—2. Radnorshire, inland co. of South Wales, bounded N. by Montgomeryshire and Shropshire, E. by Herefordshire, S. and SW. by Brecknockshire, and W. by Cardiganshire; greatest length, N. and S., 30 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 34 miles; area, 301,164 ac., pop. 23,281. (At the time of taking the last census the pop. of this county was temporarily augmented by a large number of workmen employed in the construction of Birmingham New Waterworks. These men, with their families, principally affected the pop. of the following pars.:—Bleddfa, Cwmdenddwr, Llansantffraid, Llanwrthwl, and Rhayader.) Radnorshire is the smallest of the six counties of South Wales. The county is served by the L. & NW., the G. W., and Cam. Rys. In the E. and S. are some comparatively level tracts, including the Vale of Radnor, but the greater portion of the surface is hilly, or even mountainous, the Forest of Radnor reaching in its highest summit an elevation of 2186 ft. Oats and wheat are grown in the lower parts, but attention is chiefly directed to the rearing of stock; the higher parts serve only for the feeding of sheep and the breeding of Welsh ponies. Butter is made in large quantities. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The minerals are of little value, except the limestone which underlies the Vale of Radnor. The mfrs. are very limited, chiefly flannel. The forests, which at one time were of great extent, have long disappeared. There are several medicinal mineral springs, those of Llandrindod being in great repute. None of the rivers (Wye, Elan, Ithon, &c.) are navigable, but the railway communication is good. Welsh is less spoken than in any other co. of Wales. Presteigne is the co. town. Radnorshire was made a county by Henry VIII. It comprises 63 pars. It contains no parl. or mun bor. It is in the dioceses of St. David's and Hereford. It returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 5360 electors.

Richmond (anciently called Sheen) is a much-frequented river-side resort. It occupies a site of remarkable beauty, on the slope of Richmond Hill, which rises somewhat abruptly from the right bank of the Thames, here crossed by a handsome 5-arch bridge leading to St. Margaret's; there is a lock and footbridge. The lock is 16 miles from London Bridge and 96 m. from Oxford. The scenery combines all the charms of wood, meadow, and water, and the prospect from the summit of the hill is very fine. The boundary was extended in 1890. Richmond Palace (now vanished) was for many centuries a favourite residence of the English monarchs, and Edward III., Henry VII., and Elizabeth died in it. Richmond Park, formed by Charles I., is enclosed by a wall 8 miles in length, has red and fallow deer, excellent timber, and 2 fine sheets of water (the Pen Ponds), and contains Pembroke Lodge and the White Lodge. Richmond has market gardens and nursery grounds, and some small industries; but it depends chiefly on the gentry resident in the vicinity and on the crowd of summer visitors.—2. In 678 its monastery (built 661) became the seat of a bishopric, subsequently united with York. The present diocese of Ripon, created in 1836, comprises most of the West-Riding and part of the North-Riding; its area was reduced by the creation of the see of Wakefield in 1888. The cathedral, a remarkably fine edifice, was originally the church of the monastery. There is a handsome bridge over the Ure, which is here navigable. The spacious market-place is ornamented by an obelisk 90 feet high. Ripon was formerly celebrated for its spurs, but its principal manufactures now are saddle-trees, iron, machinery, leather, and varnish. There are several fairs for sheep and cattle. It gives the title of marquis to the family of Robinson. It returned 2 members to Parliament from the time of Edward VI. until 1867, and 1 member from 1867 until 1885.

The parliamentary constituency contains 13,543 electors. Market days, Monday and Saturday. Rochdale is a place of great antiquity; there was a Roman station in the vicinity. It was early noted for its woollen mfrs., which in the time of Elizabeth had attained to great prosperity; it is still a seat of the woollen trade, chiefly flannels, but to a greater extent it is a seat of the cotton trade, chiefly calicoes; it has also foundries, machine shops, a paper mill, &c., and in the neighbourhood are quarries of freestone and paving-stones, and extensive collieries. The parish church (St. Chad's), of 12th century, situated on an eminence, is approached from the lower part of the town by a flight of 122 steps. The grammar school was founded in 1565. There are public baths and a free library; the Town Hall was erected 1870–1871 at a cost of £155,000. There are cattle markets on the first and third Monday of each month; two annual fairs are held. In Rochdale the co-operative movement was originated in 1844. Lord Byron's family were barons of Rochdale, and held the manor for more than 200 years. It was made a parl. bor. in 1832, and a municipal bor. in 1856. The co. bor. was extended in 1900 to include the greater part of the urb. dist. of Castleton. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

(Romsey Infra), 533 ac., pop. 4365; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. Romsey grew to importance under the shadow of its abbey, which is supposed to have been founded about 910 by Edward the Elder for a convent of nuns. The church, which is said to present the outline and general aspect of a Norman conventual church more completely than any building of equal size in England, is now the parish church. Romsey was chartered by James I., and was for some time a seat of considerable manufacture, but its trade is now almost entirely local and agricultural; there are mfrs. of paper and leather. "Berthon" collapsible boats are also made here. Has a weekly cattle market and three annual fairs. Sir William Petty (1623–1687), one of the founders of the Royal Society, and the ancestor of the Lansdowne family, was the son of a Romsey clothier.—Romsey Extra, par., Hants, adjoining the above; 9018 ac., pop. 1232.

Mayo and Sligo; greatest length, N. and S., 59 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 35 miles; area, 629,633 ac. (26,321 water), or 2.9 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 101,791, of whom 99,085, or 97 3 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 2273, or 2.2, Episcopalians; 250, or 0.3, Presbyterians; and 100, or 0.11, Methodists. The co. is served by M. G. W. R. and partly by the G. S. & W. R. The surface is diversified by hills (especially in the N.), some fertile plains, bogs, and loughs. The river Shannon flows along the whole extent of the E. boundary, and the Suck divides a great part of the co. on the W. from co. Galway. The largest loughs are Allen, Boderg, and Nee on the line of the Shannon; and Key, Gara, and Glinn in the NW. Sheep and cattle are reared in great numbers on the extensive grazing lands known as the "Plain of Boyle." (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Carboniferous limestone is the prevailing rock; old red sandstone occurs near Boyle in the N., and at Slievebawn on the E. border. Iron ore and coal are found in the extreme N., and marble is obtained in the S. between Lough Ree and river Suck. The co. comprises 67 pars. and 8 parts of pars., and the towns of Boyle and Roscommon. For parl. purposes the co. is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Roscommon and South Roscommon—each returning 1 member; these constituencies together contain 18,013 electors.—2. Ross and Cromarty, maritime co., in NW. of Scotland—area, 3088.6 sq. m., or 1,976,707 ac.; civ. co., pop. 76,450, or 25 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 69,673. The county is served by the H. R. The parliamentary constituency contains 8098 electors. It consists of a mainland portion and an insular portion which includes Lewis Island (excluding Harris) and a number of smaller islands in the Outer Hebrides. The mainland portion extends 67 m. N. and S. between Sutherland and Inverness-shire, and 75 miles E. and W. between the Moray Firth and the Atlantic Ocean. On the E. coast, which affords good harbours, are the Dornoch Firth, Cromarty Firth, and Beauly Firth; and of numerous indentations along the W. coast the largest are Loch Broom, Gruinard Bay, Loch Ewe, Gairloch, Loch Torridon, Loch Carron, and Loch Alsh. The largest streams are the Oykell, the Alness, and the Conon, which flow to the Moray Firth. The chief inland lochs are Maree, Fannich, Luichart, Sheallag, and Rosyne. There are several lofty mountains, including Carn Eige (3877 ft.), Mam Soul (3862 ft.), Ben Wyvis (3429 ft.), and Ben Attow (3383 ft.). Of the 3 great divisions of the co., Easter Ross, including all the low land between the Dornoch and Cromarty Firths, is fertile and well cultivated; Mid. Ross, including the district (known as the Black Isle) between the Cromarty Firth and the Moray and Beauly Firths, is mostly under good cultivation; while Wester Ross, including by far the greater portion of the co., is altogether of a highland character, and abounds in rugged mountains, beautiful lochs, and wild glens. Sheep farming and cattle grazing are extensively pursued. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The distilling of whisky is the sole mfr. The fisheries, coast and inland, are extensive and valuable. The co. comprises 33 pars., the parl. and mun. burghs of Cromarty, Dingwall, and Tain (part of the Wick Burghs), the parl. and mun. burgh of Fortrose (part of the Inverness Burghs), and the police burghs of Invergordon and Stornoway. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

Roxburghshire, inland co. in S. of Scotland, bounded N. by Berwickshire, NE., E., and SE. by Northumberland and Cumberland, SW. by Dumfriesshire, and NW. by Selkirkshire and Edinburghshire; greatest length, N. and S., 42 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 30 miles; area, 665.7 sq. m. or 426,060 ac.; civ. co., pop. 48,804 or 73 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 28,365. The county is served by the N. B. R. and N. E. R. The main body of the co., or three-fourths of the whole area, belongs to the basin of the Teviot; hence the general name of Teviotdale is sometimes used for Roxburghshire. The upper portions of Teviotdale and its tributary vales, rising by gently sloping and well-rounded ridges from the banks of the streams to the watershed of the Cheviots, are chiefly bare and pastoral, but the lower portions consist of rich and well-wooded valleys. The district in the N., lying between Gala Water and Leader Water, is partly upland, but is nearly all cultivated; the tract immediately N. of the Tweed is almost level, and belongs to the Merse; while the district in the extreme SW., known as Liddesdale, is chiefly pastoral, and is bounded by lofty hill ridges. Every vale abounds in rich and lovely scenery, and there is scarcely a spot without some interesting historical association. The principal streams which flow to the Teviot are the Borthwick, Ale, Slitrig, Rule, Jed, Oxnam, and Kale. The Liddel joins the Esk before it enters the Solway Firth. The three Eildon Hills in the NW. of the co. are an interesting feature and rise to 1385 ft. Farming is the great industry, and is in a highly advanced state. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are mfrs. of woollens, tweeds, and blankets. The co. comprises 30 pars., the parl. and mun. burgh of Hawick (part of the Hawick Burghs—1 member), the royal burgh of Jedburgh, and the police burghs of Kelso and Melrose. It returns 1 member to Parliament, and contains 5793 electors.

Rutland, inland co. of England, bounded W. and N. by Leicestershire, NE. by Lincolnshire, and SE. by Northamptonshire; greatest length, N. and S., 17 m.; greatest breadth, E. and W., 17 m.; area, 97,273 ac., pop. 19,709. The parliamentary constituency contains 4171 electors. Rutland is the smallest county in England and is served by the M. R. and partly by the L. & NW. R. and G. N. R. The surface is diversified by gently rising hills and fine valleys, and is watered by the Eye Brook, the Chater, and the Gwash, flowing into the Welland, which forms the south-eastern boundary. The soil is in general loamy and fertile; in the east part it is chiefly in tillage, and in the west part under grass. The chief crops are wheat and barley. Great attention is paid to rearing choice breeds both of cattle and sheep. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) In the Vale of Catmose, round Oakham, are tracts of woodland, the remains of old forests. The prevailing rock is limestone; iron ore is worked. Rutland was made a county by Henry III., and gives the title of Duke to the family of Manners. It contains 58 pars. and the market towns of Oakham (where the assizes are held) and Uppingham; it has no parliamentary or municipal boroughs. It is in the diocese of Peterborough. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members until 1885.

St. Albans, mun. bor., city, market town, and par., with ry. stas., M. R., L. & NW. R., and G. N. R. (alt., 276 ft.), Herts, 10 m. SE. of Luton and 21½ NW. of London by rail; 997 ac., pop. 16,019; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. St. Albans stands on a hill washed by the Ver rivulet, on the other side of which are a few remains of the ancient Roman town of Verulamium, a rough oval 1500 yds. from N. to S. and 850 yds. from E. to W., traversed by Watling Street. It owes its name to Alban, the first Christian martyr in Great Britain, who suffered about 300, in memory of whom a monastery was erected in 793 by Offa, King of Mercia. In the 12th century the Abbot of St. Albans obtained precedence over all English abbots, and exemption from the payment of Peter's pence, from Pope Adrian IV. (Nicholas Brakespear), who was a native of the neighbourhood. In Richard II.'s reign the monastery was besieged by Wat Tyler's followers assisted by the townsmen. During the Wars of the Roses 2 great battles were fought at St. Albans, in the first of which (1455) the Yorkists were victorious, and in the second (1461) the Lancastrians. The diocese of St. Albans was formed in 1875. The cathedral, formerly the abbey church, is a large and beautiful building; its restoration, at the expense of Lord Grimthorpe, was completed in 1894. It contains the tomb of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. St. Michael's Church contains the tomb (and a statue) of Lord Bacon. The mfr. of straw-plait is carried on, and there are silk mills and breweries. St. Albans gives the title of Duke to the family of Beauclerk, and in the Grimston family is the title of Earl of Verulam. It was incorporated in 1554; it returned 2 members to Parliament until 1832, when it was disfranchised.

R., Fife, on St. Andrews Bay, 13½ miles SE. of Dundee and 55¾ miles NE. of Edinburgh by rail—par., 12,570 ac., pop. 9410; parl. burgh, pop. 7619; royal burgh, mun. burgh, and town, pop. 7621; P.O., T.O. Market day, Monday. St. Andrews was founded in the time of the Culdees, and was then called Muckross, afterwards Kilrymont; was long the ecclesiastical metropolis of Scotland; was made a royal burgh about 1140; was the scene of the martyrdom of Patrick Hamilton (1527), George Wishart (1545), and others, and the assassination of Cardinal Beaton (1546); here (1298) a parliament assembled to swear fealty to Edward I., and a few years later to take the oath of allegiance to Robert Bruce. The town diminished in importance after 1650, but revived about 1853; and is now a fashionable watering-place. The University of St. Andrews, founded in 1411, is the oldest of the Scottish universities; includes the College of St. Salvator and St. Leonard, devoted to Arts and Medicine, and the College of St. Mary, devoted to Divinity; and had 16 professors and 465 students in 1902-3. In 1889 University College, Dundee, was incorporated with St. Andrews University. The Cathedral, now a ruin, was founded in 1159; the church of St. Regulus, or St. Rule, is a well-preserved ruin; and there are also remains of two monasteries. The ruins of the Bishop's Palace or Castle (13th century) are situated on a rocky promontory overhanging the sea. The shipping trade is very small; a number of the inhabitants engage in the herring fisheries. On the pier head is a flashing light visible 6 m., and another light in a turret, 80 ft. above high water, is a flashing light visible 5 m. St. Andrews is the "Mecca" of golf and the headquarters of the "Royal and Ancient Club," founded in 1754. It has three of the finest golf courses in Scotland. The St. Andrews District of Parliamentary Burghs (St. Andrews, Crail, Cupar, Anstruther Easter, Anstruther Wester, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem) returns 1 member. R., Flintshire, and par.—par., 1646 ac., pop. 1788; bor., 5¼ miles N. of Denbigh, pop. 1765; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. St. Asaph stands on an eminence in the Vale of Clwyd, near the confluence of the Clwyd and the Elwy. A monastery is said to have been founded here, during his exile, by Kentigern, or St. Mungo, founder of the see of Glasgow, and under his disciple and successor, St. Asaph, the church became the cathedral of the diocese which from about the middle of the 12th century has been known by his name. The present cathedral, the smallest in Great Britain, dates partly from the close of the 13th century. It has been completely restored in recent years. Mrs. Hemans, the poetess, lived many years near St. Asaph.

St. Athan, par. and vil. with ry. sta. (St. Athan Road, 1 m. E.), Taff Vale Ry., Glamorgan—par., 1527 ac., pop. 365; vil., 5 miles SE. of Cowbridge; P.O., T.O.

SW. of Exeter by rail—urb. dist. and par., 195 ac., pop. 3340; P.O., T.O. Market day, Friday. St. Austell has some mfrs. of iron, machinery, and woollen cloth, and a pilchard fishery; but it owes its importance to the china-clay works and tin and copper mines in its vicinity. Great quantities of china-clay and china-stone are exported from the neighbouring harbours of Charlestown and Pentewan. About 2 miles NE. of the town is the Carclaze Mine, a vast excavation, of unknown antiquity, which long yielded tin but now yields china-clay. The church of St. Austell (restored 1870) is one of the finest in Cornwall. St. Austell Bay, 4 miles wide, penetrates 5 miles, and is separated from Mevagissey Bay on the S. by Black Head.

It is pleasantly situated on the E. side of St. Aubin's Bay, and is protected by Fort Regent and Elizabeth Castle. Adjacent to Elizabeth Castle are the ruins of an old hermitage, the traditional abode of St. Helier. In 1781 a fierce conflict took place in Royal Square between a French party under the command of Baron de Rullecourt and British soldiers and Jersey militiamen under Major Peirson. The French were defeated and both commanders were killed. The harbour, docks, and quays are spacious and commodious, and there is a considerable shipping trade. Shipbuilding and fishing are carried on, and there are foundries, breweries, and mfrs. of soap and candles. On the esplanade is a fixed light 48 feet above high water and visible 5 m. See also HERMITAGE. But St. Helier is chiefly a watering-place, a summer resort, and a favourite place of residence, the mildness of the climate and the cheapness of provisions being great attractions. It is the terminus of the two railway lines of Jersey. On its E. side is Victoria College (1851).

Sarum, Old, Wiltshire, 2 miles N. of Salisbury, an old British settlement, where the Romans formed a station, Sorbiodunum, on Icknield street. In 552 it was taken by Kenric, who named it Searesbyrig ("dry town"), and it became the residence of the Kings of Wessex. After the conquest, in 1072, the bishopric of Wiltshire was transferred to Sarum from Sherborne by Bishop Herman, who also began the erection of a cathedral which Bishop Osmund completed in 1092. It was the latter bishop who in 1085 compiled the "Use of Sarum," the most famous of the English mediæval service-books, which formed the basis of the English Prayer Book. In consequence of quarrels between the clergy and the castellans the foundation of the present cathedral at Salisbury, or New Sarum, was laid in 1220, and soon the people began to migrate to the new city. There are remains still existing of the vast fortifications of the ancient city, and the site of the castle may be traced. John of Salisbury, historian and biographer, was born here in the 11th century. Old Sarum returned 2 members to Parliament until 1832.

Scarborough ("fort on the rock"), parl. and mun. bor., par., seaport, and watering-place, with ry. sta., N. E. R., N. R. Yorkshire, 42 miles NE. of York by rail; bor. and par., 2373 ac., pop. 38,161. The parliamentary constituency contains 6134 electors. Market day, Thursday. Scarborough is situated on a semicircular bay, and rises from the shore in the form of an amphitheatre. On the N. the bay is protected by a high promontory, on which stands the castle (1136), formerly a fortress of immense strength; it was twice besieged by the Parliamentary forces during the Civil War. The newer and the older parts of the town, separated by a chasm, are connected by two bridges. Scarborough is much frequented for seabathing and for its mineral waters, which have long been in repute; there are several good hotels and a hydropathic establishment. The Spa has beautifully laid-out grounds and a fashionable promenade. Inclined tramways run from the beach of the S. bay to the top of the cliffs. The cost of the marine drive and sea wall round the castle is estimated at £80,000. The harbour is of great importance to the coasting trade, being used as a place of shelter from the easterly gales, and attention has been paid to it from an early period; it is enclosed by three piers. On St. Vincent Pier is a lighthouse 56 ft. high, with fixed light 58 ft. above high water and seen 13 miles. There is a floating dock for the repair of ships. Some foreign trade is carried on with France, Holland, and the Baltic, and a considerable coasting trade with the Tyne and the Tees; the fisheries are actively prosecuted. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mfr. of jet ornaments is also an important industry. The fine old church of St. Mary was built in the reign of Stephen. The Seabathing Infirmary was founded in 1812, and a large aquarium was opened in 1877. Scarborough was a borough by prescription, first chartered in 1181. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from the time of Edward I. until 1885.

Scilly Islands, island-group at the entrance of the English Channel, 25 miles SW. of Land's End. The islands comprise 5 parishes of Cornwall; pop. 2092; they are in the Western or St. Ives Parliamentary Division of that county. They are about 30 miles in circumference and number 140, but only five of them are of any importance, viz., St. Mary's, Tresco, St. Martin's, St. Agnes, Bryher, each constituting a separate parish. Hugh Town (St. Mary's) is the seat of government, which is managed by 12 of the principal inhabitants who constitute the Court of Twelve. The inhabitants are engaged in raising and exporting early vegetables for the London market, in the fisheries, and in seafaring pursuits. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The islands rise steeply from the sea, and have proved very dangerous to mariners. On St. Mary's Island is a Lloyd's signal station, and on the end of the pier a fixed light visible 3 miles. On the Bishop Rock is a group-flashing light visible 18 miles; on the summit of St. Agnes Island a revolving light visible 8 miles; and on Round Island, at N. side of group, a flashing light visible 20 miles. The Scilly islands are supposed to have been the Cassiterides of the Greeks and Romans. After the withdrawal of the Romans they were occupied by a Celtic population, who have left stone circles, kistvaens, cromlechs, and other remains. In the 10th century they were annexed to Saxon England by Athelstan. During the Civil War they held out for the King, afforded temporary shelter to Prince Charles, and were captured by Blake. They now form part of the Duchy of Cornwall.

Sheerness was captured by De Ruyter in 1667, and was shortly afterwards fortified; its present fortifications are of modern erection and immense strength. The harbour is safe and commodious, with deep water close alongside the quays at low tide. The dockyard was commenced in 1814; it covers 60 ac. and contains three basins and five docks. The barracks, naval and military, accommodate about 2000 seamen and as many soldiers. The modern part of the town, known as S. on Sea, is separated from the older portion by a moat crossed by bridges; it is in favour as a summer resort; has spacious esplanades, a fine beach, and excellent facilities for bathing and boating. On a circular fort on Garrison Point is a fixed light visible 5 miles. Here the mutiny of the Nore broke out in 1797.

R. and (Victoria) G. C. R.; also served by the L. D. & E. C. R.—parl. bor., 19,643 ac., pop. 380,793; co. bor., 19,643 ac., pop. 380,793; par., 3030 ac., pop. 90,398. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Sheffield has long been famous for its cutlery, but has also manufactures of almost every description, and in connection with these numerous large iron and brass foundries, grinding, tilting, rolling, and slitting mills &c. The branches of manufacture include steel, mostly made from Swedish iron; armour-plates for ships of war, rails, wheels, and all other castings for fixed or rolling stock, cycles, Britannia-metal goods; and optical instruments including spectacles. The electro-plate industry was introduced in 1742. Sheffield is picturesquely situated in an amphitheatre of wooded hills, traversed by the river Don which here receives the Sheaf, Rivelin, Loxley, and Porter. It has several fine public buildings, and in the older parts of the town great street improvements have in recent years been made by the corporation. The Town Hall, which cost with site £182,000, was opened by the late Queen Victoria in 1897. Among the educational and literary institutions is the Firth College, erected in 1879, in connection with the movement for the extension of university education. There are several public parks, including Weston Park (with the Mappin Art Gallery, Museum and Observatory), Norfolk Park, Firth Park, and Meers Park (with Ruskin Museum). Sheffield is a very ancient place, supposed to have been originally a Roman station and was the property of Waltheof, the last of the Saxon barons, but it has few relics of antiquity. Its castle, probably of 13th century, where, and in the Manor House, Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned for many years, was demolished by order of Parliament in 1648. A part of the magnificent manor-house which was built in the time of Henry VIII., and where Cardinal Wolsey rested several days on his last journey, is still standing, and in 1873 was restored by the Duke of Norfolk, the lord of the manor. The modern history of Sheffield is closely connected with that of Trades Unions. It narrowly escaped being burned by the Chartists in 1840, and was the scene of a terrible calamity in 1864, caused by the bursting of the Bradfield Reservoir. Sheffield had already become noted for its cutlery in the time of Chaucer, but for many centuries its progress as a town was slow. It is only since the middle of the 18th century, or even later, that it has risen to be one of the great manufacturing towns of the kingdom. It was made a parliamentary borough in 1832 and a city in 1893; its boundaries were extended in 1901. It returns 5 members to Parliament (5 divisions—viz., Attercliffe, Brightside, Central, Hallam, and Ecclesall—1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 2 to 5 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 61,161 electors.

Shetland, insular co. of Scotland, 50 miles NE. of Orkney; 551.4 sq. m. or 352,889 ac.; civ. co., pop. 28,166 or 51 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 27,736; Mainland, pop. 19,109. The group consists of about 100 islands, 27 of which are inhabited—Mainland, Yell, Unst, Fetlar, Whalsay, and Bressay being the largest. Mainland, comprising more than half the area of the whole group, extends N. and S. for 54 miles, and has an extreme breadth of 21 miles, but the coast-line is so irregular and deeply indented that no spot is 4 miles from the sea. The surface of Shetland is generally bleak and moorish, and rises to a maximum alt. of 1475 ft., but only in a few places higher than 500 ft. The rock scenery around the coasts is exceedingly grand and interesting. The climate is humid and comparatively mild, but severe storms are frequent. Large numbers of cattle and sheep of native breeds are reared, and the small Shetland ponies are remarkable for their strength and hardiness. Barley, oats, turnips, and potatoes are grown. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The fisheries, especially the herring fishery, are of the greatest importance, and afford the chief employment. There are also whaling companies and factories (Ronas Voe, Colla Firth, Olna Firth) for boiling down the blubber. The knitting of woollen articles is also a great industry. The inhabitants are mostly of Norwegian descent. There are lighthouses at Sumburgh Head, Bressay, Out Skerries, North Unst, &c. Shetland comprises 12 pars., and the police burgh of Lerwick. It unites with Orkney in returning 1 member; the parliamentary constituency of Shetland and Orkney contains 7576 electors.
